Ramon coming back to Labor - Zvilli

Procedural hurdles to be lifted today

SARAH HONIG

HISTADRUT Chairman Haim Ramon is on his way back to Labor, party secretary-general Nissim Zvilli told members of the party's political bureau yesterday afternoon.

He said "speeded up negotiations are now under way" and "results can be expected by the end of the month."

This morning, Zvilli is due to formally announce that most of the procedural hurdles to Ramon's return have been lifted and that the letters of expulsion sent to Ramon and MKs Amir Peretz and Shmuel Avital are soon to be rescinded, possibly in two weeks.

This has been one of Ramon's basic conditions for rejoining Labor. The three were expelled last year, when they challenged the Labor Histadrut ticket - which they then handily defeated. However, the three have not been removed from the Labor Knesset faction.

Ramon declined to comment, but those close to him indicated he is not fully satisfied with the various legal obstacles have been dealt with. He is said to think that all Zvilli is about to do is issue a declaration of intent to rescind the letters.

The actual cancellation of the expulsion would require amending Labor's constitution. This is a complex task, as the precedent could be exploited by other potential rebels, such as Avigdor Kahalani and Eli Dayan.

Zvilli - who was one of Ramon's most implacable foes during the period which led up to the May Histadrut election and immediately following - told the Labor bureau he has conferred with Ramon several times in the past two weeks to work out an agreement.

"My impression is that Ramon is very interested in coming back," he said.

Bringing back Ramon is considered a public relations coup necessary to turn around the party's failing fortunes and raise morale.

It is not clear whether a Ramon return would automatically mean his return to the cabinet, as his Histadrut position is seen as more powerful than most ministerial posts.

Besides the problems surrounding the demand that the expulsions be rescinded, there are other difficulties.

Ramon is demanding the party conduct open primaries for its next slate of Knesset candidates. This would make anyone eligible to vote, not only party members. It would also require central committee approval, which is far from certain, especially as the party is disenchanted with primaries altogether.

Ramon is seeking to regain control of the Histadrut, which would entail a merger with Ramon's Ram faction. The hitch is that Ram is not comprised solely of Labor defectors; it includes sizable Meretz and Shas components.

One possible way of resolving the problem was recently suggested by Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, who spoke of an alignment between the two factions. There has been stiff opposition to this, however, from both Meretz and Shas.

One of Ramon's chief boosters in Labor, MK Hagai Merom, argued yesterday that "Zvilli's vague declarations of intent are insufficient. What is needed is a specific, unequivocal decision to cancel the expulsion and employ ad hoc constitutional amendments to rescind the letters. Once Ramon is back in Labor, negotiations can begin on the Histadrut faction and primary issues."

Syria said willing to forge ties after initial Golan withdrawal

DAVID MAKOVSKY

SYRIA is reportedly willing to establish at least a modicum of diplomatic relations with Israel after the first stage of a phased withdrawal from the Golan Heights, it was learned yesterday.

Until recently, Syria was insisting that any normalization with Israel would occur only after a complete withdrawal.

Syria apparently changed its view after President Hafez Assad met with US President Bill Clinton in October. It remains unclear whether Syria would establish consular links or something less than that after an initial withdrawal.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin wants the Syrians to establish full diplomatic relations after the first phase of withdrawal, in keeping with the pace of the 1979 Israel-Egypt peace treaty. The first stage of the two-phased Israeli withdrawal from Sinai and exchange of ambassadors occurred approximately nine months after the peace treaty was signed.

During Clinton's visit to Damascus, differences also narrowed somewhat on the duration of the Golan withdrawal. Syria, which wanted Israel's withdrawal to be completed within several months, agreed that the Israeli pullback could take up to 18 months. Rabin has said that with

Rabin-Arafat summit ends in deadlock

JON IMMANUEL

A PALESTINIAN Authority minister talked of a crisis; Israel denied it. But yesterday's Erez summit broke up in deadlock after PLO leader Yasser Arafat failed to persuade Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin to lift the closure on Gaza.

Arafat scuttled a planned joint press conference and avoided reporters on his way out of the liaison offices at the entrance to the Gaza Strip.

"I think it is a crisis," Information Minister Yasser Abed-Rabbo told reporters at an impromptu meeting. But on this, as on other issues, there was no agreement.

"I am not trying to say there are not differences, but I will by no means describe the meeting as a crisis. Nor is there a stop in the talks between us," Rabin told reporters.

Talks are to continue, and Rabin and Arafat are to meet again next Thursday.

"We are ready to keep the closure, on the one hand, and continue the negotiations, on the other, because we believe there should be no halt in the negotiations," he said.

Israeli officials, however, are concerned that yesterday's meeting will cast a shadow over Sunday's meeting of foreign ministers of Israel, Jordan, Egypt, the Palestinians, and the US in Washington. The US hopes to use the session to push regional cooperation.

Environment Minister Yossi Sarid and Deputy Foreign Minister

Yossi Beilin, who also attended the talks, shared Rabin's view. "We don't have the possibility of lifting the closure now, because we have solid information about possible terrorist events in the near future," Sarid said.

"I wish the security situation would be such that the closure could be lifted," Rabin said.

Palestinians, though, have little understanding of Israel's need to keep them away after serious terrorist attacks. They simply consider the closure vindictive.

The Nablus-based Center for Palestine Research and Studies yesterday published a survey showing that 64.3 percent of Palestinians consider Rabin's "separation" plan "retaliatory and vindictive collective punishment."

Arafat tried to persuade Rabin the PA has taken serious measures against terrorism, saying the Palestinian Police had foiled several planned attacks, the latest being a suicide-bomber plot on Wednesday night.

The Palestinian Police has arrested more than 80 activists from Nayef Hawatmeh's Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine, and 20 from Islamic Jihad this week, some in house-to-house searches. They closed down DFLP headquarters and the Islamic Jihad newspaper office.

However, Israeli security sources noted that the DFLP is a soft target, and that few Hamas members have been arrested. They even suspect that Hamas, which initially claimed responsibility, not the DFLP, carried out

Levine denies soldier killed by friendly fire

ALON PINKAS

OC Northern Command Maj.-Gen. Amram Levine last night denied that Maj. Khawwan Hamad was killed by friendly fire during a battle with Hizbullah gunmen on December 19.

He also denied that the truth was withheld from Hamad's family.

According to an article by Mordechai Alon in today's issue of the Haifa newspaper Kol-Bo, Hamad was killed by mistake by IDF soldiers carrying out "kill verification."

This often-criticized practice has been devised to prevent wounded enemy gunmen from shooting IDF soldiers at close range, as the soldiers allegedly "verify" their targets are dead by shooting them again before approaching.

Last of land promised to Jordan returned

DAVID RUDGE, AMIR ROZENBLIT, and news agencies

SOME 4,800 dunams (1,200 acres) of land were officially returned to Jordanian sovereignty in two ceremonies yesterday, near Moshav Tzofar in the Arava in the morning, and later at Naharayim in the Jordan Valley.

At the latter event, Jordanian and Israeli officials also signed three agreements relating to security arrangements, military cooperation, tourism, and border crossings.

The earlier, more modest ceremony was delayed for a time when a Jordanian officer pointed out that the Israeli flag displayed at the event was larger than the Jordanian flag. An Israeli officer immediately had the Israeli flag replaced with a smaller one.

King Hussein toured the land returned yesterday, and expressed optimism.

"I am very hopeful of the period ahead, a period of consolidation," the king told reporters. "The possibilities are limitless."

Hussein stressed that the peace treaty was negotiated without outside involvement.

"We faced up to our responsibilities and we hope that the other side will do the same," he said. "I hope they will achieve what we have achieved and we will all have peace in the region."

The return of the land to Jordanian sovereignty, in accordance with the terms of the peace treaty, also marked the conclusion of the redeployment of IDF and Jordanian forces along both sides of the new border.

Under the terms of the agreement, Israeli farmers will be able to continue cultivating the land for at least the next 25 years.

Dozens of Jordanians, led by members of the joint committee that ironed out the agreements, as well as journalists and local council officials attended the ceremony at Naharayim.

The head of the Jordanian delegation to the joint committee, Dr. Hani Mulki, praised the wisdom and courage of King Hussein and Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin "in making this day possible."

"In peace there are no losers, as peace and tranquility are for all of us to maintain and cherish. Jordanians and Israelis share dreams of leading a decent life and securing a prosperous future," said Mulki.

His Israeli counterpart, Elyakim Rubinstein, said the salute and shaking of hands between IDF and Jordanian Army officers at the ceremony was in itself a symbolic gesture of peace and hope for the future.

The ceremony was attended by dozens of people from the region, including members of Kibbutz Ashdot Ya'acov Meuhad and Ashdot Ya'acov Ihud, which farm the land at Naharayim.

Youngsters from area kibbutzim also handed "peace letters" to Jordanian officials, which they asked to be given to children in the village of Bakura on the Jordanian side.

"I usually like to receive land, not to give it back, but if we look closely at this agreement, I believe it is something we can live with," said Jordan Valley Regional Council head Ze'ev Shore.

Kibbutz members will receive special tags that will enable them to cross the new border to reach their fields and orchards.

Similar arrangements will prevail at Tzofar, where residents said they had begun getting to know their new neighbors once it was determined that some of their fields would be handed over.

Yair Cohen, a moshav farmer, said that friendships, or at least good neighborly relations, were beginning to develop. Several senior Jordanian officers manning a post near Tzofar have visited the moshav, he said. "The friendship with the Jordanians has been going on for several weeks now," Cohen said. "We are transferring these lands with much hope for continued cooperation. We are not sad. On the contrary, the children of the moshav bring the Jordanian soldiers flowers."

Prisoners vanish into thin air

RAINE MARCUS

THREE prisoners escaped yesterday from the Tel Aviv Courthouse lockup through a ventilation grid.

Last night police were still hunting for the three - Hen Al-fassi, Michel Saissa, and Nissim Bigami - who are awaiting trial for a series of armed robberies in the Gush Dan region.

They had attended a court hearing earlier, where they were remanded until trial, and were waiting in the cells, situated below ground, to be taken back to the Abu Kabir lockup. They were in one cell with a fourth prisoner, whose escape was foiled by a police guard.

Police said the four managed to remove a metal grille from the cell window and made their way to a long row of ventilation outlets. Pushing the grid upwards, they climbed out to freedom.

Every day, families and friends of remand prisoners can be seen shouting to their loved ones through the grid, situated on the pavement just a meter away from a main entrance to the court room, and opposite a large parking lot. But in broad daylight yesterday, nobody apparently saw anything.

The security guard seated at the entrance to the court building who checks visitors for weapons said he saw nothing. "It's not my job to keep an eye out for escaped prisoners," he said.

Tel Aviv deputy police chief Dep.-Cmdr. Shlomo Turgeanu has ordered an inquiry to determine how the escape - the first of its kind from the court cells - occurred. By last night the grid had been secured with a large padlock.

Sanbar-Grofman feud worsens

Jerusalem Post Staff

THERE was further unpleasantness yesterday between Bank Leumi Chairman Moshe Sanbar and Shlomo Grofman, managing director of Africa-Israel, the bank's real-estate subsidiary, Israel Television reported last night.

According to the broadcast, Sanbar submitted a report three weeks ago to the bank's board of directors, that said Grofman sold an apartment in Holon in 1982 to a subsidiary of the bank, received the full purchase price before the contract was signed, and continued to live in the apartment for three years rent-free.

According to the report, the transaction was neither reported to the stock exchange nor to the Securities Authority.

Bank Leumi issued a statement saying that its board had discussed the issue in 1987 and decided to take no further action.

Sanbar resigned as Africa-Israel's chairman earlier this week, citing the ongoing friction between him and Grofman.

NPT feud overshadows summit; Christopher says Arafat more forthcoming

HILLEL KUTTLER

WASHINGTON

EFFORTS to hammer out a joint statement for Sunday's foreign ministers' summit here are being complicated by the Israeli-Egyptian feud over the latter's demand that Israel sign the international Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT).

Israeli officials said last night the US hopes to have Sunday's summit include a statement about regional cooperation on non-proliferation.

"They really want it to appear in the joint statement," an official said.

Last week's meeting between foreign ministers Shimon Peres and Amr Moussa seemed to have toned down the Israeli-Egyptian rift over NPT in advance of the Jordan-Israel-Egypt-PLO summit in Cairo. As a result of the Peres-Moussa meeting, the Cairo communique commended President Hosni Mubarak's efforts to rid the region of weapons of mass destruction and said the parties would "pursue a mutually verifiable zone" free of such weapons.

But Moussa has stated recently that Egypt would not agree to the joint statement Sunday that includes a condemnation of terrorism unless Israel committed to sign the NPT.

"What's clear is that we and the Americans want to see the summit - the atmosphere, the joint statement - be successful," the Israeli official said. "Moussa's statements aren't exactly helpful, but rather are inflaming the situation."

But a senior administration official said that while not "everybody has similar views here," the US believes the matter "won't be a problem."

Meanwhile, Secretary of State

Warren Christopher told a Jewish group Wednesday night that PLO chairman Yasser Arafat has been "much more forthcoming in his actions and his statements" about cracking down on terrorism.

Nevertheless, "there is a lot more he can do," including condemning terrorism in his Arabic statements, a participant in the meeting reported Christopher as telling the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations.

The meeting was also attended by Assistant Secretary for Near East Affairs Robert Pelletreau and US peace team members Dennis Ross and Aaron Miller.

Christopher said he is more satisfied than he had previously been with Arafat's commitment to act against those who have attacked Israelis, the source said.

Christopher also told the group the administration continues to press Syria to evict terrorist groups from its territory.

Supreme Court distinguishes between aiding and abetting suicide

EVELYN GORDON

THE Supreme Court yesterday overturned the conviction of a 70-year-old woman who tried to help her boyfriend, 68, commit suicide. It said the crime of assisting a suicide entails not merely trying to help, but succeeding in hastening death.

However, it convicted her on the lesser charge of attempting to abet a suicide. Her sentence was therefore only reduced from three years to 18 months. However, due to her age, she was given a month's grace period to apply for a pardon before serving her sentence.

Mina Kruglitz began living with Yafim Lieberman in 1989. Lieberman suffered from both Parkinson's disease and heart trouble, and his poor health led him to attempt suicide several times. He also repeatedly begged Kruglitz to help him, and eventually she gave in.

In May 1991 she bought a bottle of rat poison, and gave Lieberman a mixed dose of the poison and sleeping pills. She also refrained from summoning help as his condition worsened during the night, and when a friend who dropped by for a chance visit the next morning called an ambulance, she failed to tell the doctors about either the poison or the sleeping pills. Lieberman died later that day.

Tel Aviv District Court convicted Kruglitz of abetting a suicide. However, Justices Mishael

Cheshin, Aharon Barak, and Eliahu Mazza all said there is reason to doubt that Kruglitz's actions actually caused Lieberman's death. In a split decision, they ruled she could not be found guilty of abetting a suicide, even though she was guilty of trying to do so.

The factual doubt as to the effect of Kruglitz's actions stemmed from a number of factors. While none of the expert witnesses had personal experience with the type of poison used, they put a fatal dose somewhere between 2.92 grams and five grams. However, the entire bottle of poison pellets contained only about one gram of poison, and it is likely that Lieberman actually swallowed only about one-sixth of this quantity.

Furthermore, the symptoms revealed by the pathological examination, though consistent with the effects of poison, were also consistent with a worsening of Lieberman's existing health problems - and there was no evidence of several symptoms specific to poisoning.

Therefore, the justices said, though it is clear that giving a man in Lieberman's state of health a mixed dose of poison and sleeping pills, and then failing to summon aid, would not contribute to his well-being, it is not clear that it actually caused his death. The sleeping pills themselves, they added, appeared not to have been intended to cause death; they were merely intended to make the effects of the poison less unpleasant.

Presidents' Conference may name Sephardi chief

HILLEL KUTTLER

WASHINGTON

THE Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations is poised to name its first-ever Sephardi leader.

Meeting here on Wednesday night, the conference's nominating committee selected Leon Levy, a New Yorker, to become chairman beginning in June.

Conference members must still vote on the nomination when it meets next month, but "it's very unusual that a candidate does not get elected," the conference's top professional, Malcolm Hoenlein, said yesterday.

The closure stays

NOT surprisingly, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin refused in his meeting with Yasser Arafat at the Erez checkpoint yesterday to lift the closure of the territories and release Palestinian terrorists from prison. The latest murder of an Israeli in Gaza, under the noses of the Palestinian Police, ruled out such a gesture. It is clear that, at this point, most Israelis would deeply resent the resumption of free movement from the territories. And Rabin is too aware of his position in the polls to defy the public on this issue. Not only is Binayamin Netanyahu ahead of him by at least 14 points; even Rafael Eitan has a slight edge over him.

Before the lifting of the closure could be contemplated, Rabin said, he wants to see a sincere, effective effort by Yasser Arafat's regime "to apprehend the inciters, organizers, and operators of terrorism." One can only hope Rabin will not be fooled by the kind of arrests following terrorist strikes which Arafat's minister Nabil Shaath recently described as "nothing more than a show." Indeed, the suddenness with which the Palestinian Authority has announced the prevention of various planned attacks on Israeli targets makes one wonder if Arafat's effort will focus on inventing fiction or creating facts.

Nor should the general coolness of the Erez meeting obscure the fact that Arafat did extract one concession: he managed to convince Rabin that the PA must have another 2,000 policemen. The police force, now numbering 15,000 men, is already twice the size the Cairo accord allows. And it may be that what enabled Arafat to get this concession was Rabin's own insistence that there should be only one armed force in the self-rule areas. Rabin may have been persuaded that a larger police force is needed to successfully tackle the Islamic and radical rejectionists. But the addition of 2,000 troops only increases the number of potential terrorists and the quantities of arms entering the Gaza District.

The Palestinians argue that the closure only increases suffering in the territories, pushing more Palestinians to the arms of Hamas, Islamic Jihad, and the radicals. But no nation can relinquish measures which enhance its citizens' security. Closure is not a form of collective punishment, but a preventive measure. It does make it easier to control and to prevent the infiltration of terrorists into Israel.

What Israel must now do to make such control more efficient and permanent is allow foreign workers, whose numbers should be limited only by market demand, to enter the country. Israel does not owe the Palestinians of Judea, Samaria, and Gaza a living, especially if it means risking Israeli lives. It does owe its citizens personal security. If that can be achieved best by depriving Palestinians of employment places in Israel, so be it.

Voyage of Discovery

ON a world plagued by wars, violence, overpopulation, and economic woes, it is not often these days we are moved to cast our eyes skywards for some good news. Such a moment of relief came this week, when the crews of the American shuttle and the Russian space station beamed down some magnificent pictures of their rendezvous in space.

It was a worthwhile reminder that, while in overcrowded cities and Third World battlefields, human endeavors fall far short of aspirations, there are still aspects of man's genius that give reason for hope to future generations. Steered by the first woman shuttle pilot and with a Russian former Mir cosmonaut on board, Discovery slipped into a graceful ballet around the Mir space station — "dancing in the cosmos" as shuttle commander James Wetherbee told Mir commander Alexander Viktorenko.

The encounter was the first major joint Russian-American operation in space since the end of the Cold War. Unlike isolated symbolic joint missions of the Soviet era, this week's trial is a first rehearsal for at least seven Shuttle-Mir dockings through 1997, which will start in June. The United States, Russia and other countries will start building an international space station in 1997.

In recent years the space programs have come in for severe criticism from various lobbies advocating that governments solve the earth's war and welfare problems before throwing billions into outer space. Their arguments have often put the space explorers on the defensive, especially when they cite as justification mere "human spirit" or "sense of adventure." But there were, no doubt, long-forgotten purveyors of common sense who told Marco Polo to stay home and get a decent job or emigrants flocking to America to sort out Europe's problems first.

In polluted and overcrowded New Delhi and not far from India's space research center is a scientific office tasked with improving the bullcock cart. It is a heartening sign that the totality of that much-maligned "human spirit" is still around. It was impractical pure science, artistic fantasizing, and idle curiosity that brought us the best of the 20th century, down avenues that no practical planners could have imagined. The technology, teamwork, financing, and administration that launched Discovery and Mir belong to that rather dull, boring realm of expertise that is the stuff of our everyday lives.

But the total achievement is greater than the sum of its nuts and bolts, and that is a true metaphor of human progress. The awed voices of the astronauts, the emotions of international colleagues greeting one another in space, the serene image of the beautiful man-made Mir station balanced on the earth's horizon, the easy skill of Eileen Collins nudging Discovery into orbit — these are a measure of what drives mankind onward. It is not counted in dollars; neither is it discredited by a war in Chechnya or teenage violence in New York.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

UNIQUE HORROR

Sir, — For a day or two, the media understood that Auschwitz is unique, its horror like no other, and that even now nobody really knows how to live with it. But a few minutes later, the uniqueness was already forgotten, for now it is Bosnia, Chechnya and many other places — all except the one country that has had to live with Auschwitz from the day of its birth, Israel. And still a few minutes later came the usual newscast that failed to mention that, of the two current "killers of the peace," Jewish settlers and Palestinian terrorists, one is actually killing people — Jews.

But if I thought it could not get worse, I reckoned without Time. "God of forgiveness, do not forgive these murderers of Jewish children here," Elie Wiesel could say no other words, and anyone could see how much they took out of him: he faced the uniqueness of the Holocaust. But Time, in its Auschwitz Anniversary Issue yet, got rid of it: it is not impossible but only "difficult to forgive." Thus Wiesel is instructed by Time that he did not try hard enough.

But this is only the beginning. Let anyone think that, after Auschwitz, Israel is the Jewish place to be, Time has this headline: "Fifty years after the Holocaust Jewish life blossoms in Eastern Europe." But the text that follows can only give cases of Gentile pro-Jewishness blossoming, and not a single case of Jewish ability to trust its permanence: some blossoming! And while asserting that the Russian Jews positively "flock" to Berlin and Hamburg, the text does not find it worth mentioning that Israel, hard-pressed though the country is, has taken half a million.

There is just one Jew mentioned in the text whose Jewish life may be said to "blossom," and this is Germany: the one who, lest Hitler's wish to have Germany Judenrein be posthumously fulfilled, considers it his "duty" to live there. I happen to be the person who, some 25 years ago, formulated the Jewish duty of not giving Hitler posthumous victories. But I never thought that my formula would become the perverse "duty" of helping Germans, through a friendly Jewish presence in the country, to forget what was done by their grandfathers.

SCURRILOUS AD

Sir, — Never in all my years of reading The Jerusalem Post have I come across such a scurrilous advertisement as the one you allowed to be printed in your issue of January 27.

The ad quotes from the diary of Moshe Sharett written in 1957 and from a speech by Ben-Gurion made in 1937. Both are irrelevant today. Moshe Sharett's predictions about Peres and the State of Israel proved totally wrong. Ben-Gurion's warning in 1937 that no Jew has the right to yield the rights of the Jewish People in Israel is irrelevant today. Both quotations belong in the ashcan of history.

Certain accommodations had to be made for survival and peace, but no Jewish leader, past or present, ever wanted to yield our God-given right to Eretz Yisrael.

US INCOME TAX

Sir, — With the 1994 US income-tax filing season upon us, we would like to inform the many US citizens in Israel of the following:

1) US statutes require all American citizens to file a US income-tax return on their total global income from all sources. Since $70,000 of foreign-earned income is not taxable, filing for most here does not mean paying. Furthermore, sundry incomes are tax exempt.

2) If all income is derived from abroad, the deadline for filing is June 15. If any part of derived income, including pensions such as Social Security, is from the US, filing deadline is April 15.

3) A reciprocal tax treaty was signed and finally ratified by both Israel and the US and is in force for 1994 income-tax purposes. Of special interest are the clauses that pertain to pensions for the many retirees. Israeli pensions are not taxable in the US. Social Security income is not taxable in Israel and only in the US if the citizen's total income exceeds $25,000 per annum.

4) Taxpayer assistance will be available as follows: February 13-14, US Consulate, 27 Nabulus Rd., Jerusalem. At the US Embassy, 71 Hayarkon St., Tel Aviv, February 17, 21 and 24. A refresher course on how to fill out tax forms will be sponsored by the AACI in Jerusalem and Haifa. For further information/assistance, contact AACI in Jerusalem, (02) 619252, in Haifa (04) 387140. Or you may contact the US Embassy. (03) 5170010.

'Only if I get to keep the paddle...'

Conquests that can't be held

ABBA EBAN

A paid advertisement emanating from San Francisco under the byline of an organization called Facts and Logic about the Middle East asserts that "without Judea/Samaria (the West Bank) Israel would be totally indefensible."

There is basic goodwill, but a total absence of factual logic in this statement. It is precisely the allegedly "defensible" post-1967 boundaries that have been almost impossible to defend. Israel was never more vulnerable than in the period after the 1967 military triumph. This vulnerability was attested in two concrete ways.

First, the cost in Israeli lives arising in large part from the enlarged configuration, was astronomical — even compared with the tragic losses of the past two years. Can we forget the 2,500 casualties in the Yom Kippur War, the 700 in the War of Attrition, the 650 in Lebanon and the constant toll from terrorism — which did not begin with the Oslo agreement, and which will certainly be aggravated if the Oslo agreement is annulled?

In addition to the crucial issue of Israeli casualties, the Suez-plus-Golan-plus-Gaza-plus-West Bank boundaries made generalized war not just probable, but inevitable. This was proved in 1973. A boundary that is profligate in loss of life and which makes war inevitable does not sound like a "security asset."

The paradox is that the public mood during the allegedly "good years" was absurdly buoyant. The sheer size of the Israeli jurisdiction on the maps gave a totally illusory impression of permanence and strength. The first reaction to the military victory was lucid. The doctrine was that we had acquired assets that could ultimately be used for the negotiation of peace.

A nation is unlikely to succeed in negotiations if it has no ability to confer or withhold something that the adversary desires. This "negotiating" approach to the territories was expressed in the proposal of the national unity government in June 1967 to offer peace treaties to Egypt and Syria on the basis of the international have nothing to offer except the renewal and intensification of the coercive jurisdictions from which the peace process seeks to secure Israel's release. A study of Likud proposals teaches us that no condition is so bad as to be incapable of becoming worse.

The 1967 war was sheer salvation, and I do not regret a single word that I spoke in describing our peril. ("Never was armed force used in a more righteous

Israel's wars fought from 'defensible' boundaries were less successful than those fought from 'indefensible' ones boundaries, and to explore with Jordan the idea of restoring to that country most, though not all, of the West Bank.

The brutal rejectionism of the Arab states at Khartoum caused an understandable but premature despair of the chances of conciliation in Israel.

In September 1967 the doctrine that no Israeli government or parliament had competence to bargain with the captured areas gained its first insidious ground. Meanwhile, the sprawling expanse of the captured areas began to weigh upon the land like a grievous burden. It increased our losses and condemned Israel to a chronic loss of international support (which the maligned peace process has restored).

THIS WOULD be mere history were it not for the fact that those who oppose the peace process cause.") But the passage of 27 years converted our conquests into a classic case of overextension.

Many empires and annexations have fallen victim to this disease. It seems to be impossible for an army to make territorial gains without politicians aspiring to perpetuate them beyond due limit.

The disease of overextension afflicted Napoleon in Moscow and brought his victories to naught. Overextension brought American generals to the Korean 38th parallel, from which they continued their dynamism northward, only to be thrown back by the Chinese. Happily for civilization, the German armies in two world wars overextended their forward thrust and incurred a well-merited nemesis.

Britain and France recognized that they were grossly overextended in their possessions and moved briskly to remedy the resultant malaise. The French in Algeria, the Soviets in Afghanistan and the Americans in Vietnam had no choice except to correct their overextension by agreed withdrawals.

The whites in South Africa found that the burden of maintaining their rule over the entire area overextended their resources and powers until there was no course except to restore some balance between their capacities and their areas of rule. Egypt, by pushing forward toward Ashdod and Gaza, made Israel's victory in 1967 complete.

The wars that Israel fought from the allegedly defensible boundaries in 1973, 1982 and 1989 (the intifada) were conspicuously less successful than those fought from "indefensible" boundaries in 1948, 1956 and 1967.

When a boundary is established without regional consent and international acceptance, it tends to hang on a short-lease, and rarely becomes a scene of creative and tranquil life.

The Israel that conquered comparatively spacious territories in 1967 had an effective manpower of about a million and a half adults. Can Israel rationally keep its own turbulent house in order, while simultaneously ruling two million foreigners against its will, grappling with terrorists' assaults, welcoming mass immigration and striving to build a new Middle East?

The military victory of 1967 did not give us a chance of dictating the peace. The main argument for the peace process lies in the absence of viable alternatives.

An emasculated giant called Israel

ARIEL SHARON

SIGNS of our internal disintegration are increasing. And the Arabs are aware of them too.

This week, Nabil Shaath told the London Independent: "Israel will be forced to agree to the return of 100,000 of the 1948 refugees to Galilee." Asked if the Israelis would really agree to this, Shaath, a minister in Yasser Arafat's government, replied: "It seems to me they will be forced to agree."

And Israel? It has no response. It remains mute.

Shaath's words need to be examined in the light of developments in relations between us and Israeli Arabs, who are actually Israeli Palestinians. We must remember that those Palestinians who are citizens of Israel wholeheartedly support the establishment of a Palestinian state whose capital is Jerusalem. At the same time, their direct involvement in terrorist activity against us today has decreased.

Since the "Night of the Pitchforks," when Israeli Palestinian disciples of the Islamic Movement from the area of Wadi Ara murdered Nahal soldiers near Kibbutz Galed, they have been more fearful and have changed direction. The number of attacks they have carried out is very small.

But activity by the Islamic Movement, which is closely connected with Hamas in Jerusalem and in Judea, Samaria and Gaza, has increased.

Islamic Movement members are Hamas's partners on a day-to-day basis. A large portion of the money collected for Hamas around the world passes through the Islamic Movement in Israel to its destinations in Judea, Samaria and Gaza, ultimately reaching the murder gangs. The same happens with stolen weapons, in which some of Israel's Arabs have been trading.

The Islamic Movement is raising funds and getting legal help in Israel for Hamas activists in Judea, Samaria and Gaza. It acts as an intermediary between Hamas and the PLO in Gaza, and, in mainly Egyptian — on how to destroy Israel in stages have appeared in articles by leading figures in the Arab world, in senior academic circles, among the intelligentsia. One of the minds active in this context — indeed, the leader of this unofficial trend — is Osama el-Baz, President Mubarak's adviser.

The plan to dismantle the state is no secret, but the government stays mute effect, helps Hamas in every way short of direct terrorist activity (with a few exceptions).

All this is done with extreme sophistication, under the cover of charitable, educational, sports and religious activities.

However, despite the fact that this link with Hamas poses a serious danger to our coexistence with Israeli Palestinians, Israel isn't doing anything beyond observing events, like a person stricken with paralysis.

"The law doesn't allow us to act," the government claims. But no one demands changing the law. It seems a futile exercise. The government itself recently passed a law permitting it to take action against PLO government offices in Jerusalem. But it has done nothing.

The PLO is laughing up its sleeve, and the European foreign ministers don't give a hoot.

And Israel, with all the power and justice on its side, looks like an emasculated giant.

THERE WAS no surprise in what Nabil Shaath said. For some years now, similar statements —

What are these circles thinking, and what are the different stages of their "program"?

● The first stage: portraying Israel as "rejecting peace," while the Arab world, including the PLO, desires it. This will deepen Israel's isolation and increase pressure on it. This has already taken place.

● In the second stage, Israel will be forced to embark upon difficult and painstaking negotiations in a process which, ultimately, will take it back to the 1967 lines. As a result, Israel will again be weakened, losing its defensive capability.

● The third stage will see the intifada moving from the "1967 model" to the "1947 model" and focusing mainly on Galilee, where most Israeli Arabs live. After a long and wearying struggle, Israel will also give up central Galilee and the northern and southern "triangles" (from Megiddo, through Wadi Ara, to Kfar Kassem, an area in which 250,000 Palestinian citizens of Israel live, most of them supporters of the Islamic Movement).

● The fourth and final stage: After the retreat to borders approximating the 1947 Partition Plan, these Arab circles think Israel's continued existence is strictly a question of time.

Shaath's declaration fits in well with this plan; it will, indeed, hasten its implementation.

Does all this seem like a fantasy? When I spoke and wrote about this some years ago, it appeared, even to me, to be no more than a nightmarish vision. But it is all actually happening before our eyes — chiefly thanks to the unstinting help of our government.

POSTSCRIPTS

CLIVE SABEL wasn't worried by the security situation here when he decided to make his first trip to Israel. The 26-year-old from Devon, England, spent his first day touring Jerusalem — and was promptly shot by a rubber bullet.

Sabel was strolling through the Old City when a minor brouhaha broke out between a few Arabs and about a dozen soldiers. Just as Sabel happened to walk by, the soldiers took action to quell the problem, and he was hit in the chest.

After he recovered from the initial shock, he approached the soldiers to face his "attacker" and was surprised to see that the soldier was very young, very frightened — and still wielding a menacing bazooka-type gun. Sabel prudently left the matter at that and went on his way, already possessing his first two souvenirs: the rubber bullet, and a bad bruise.

A firm hand with Assad

CHAIM HERZOG

WE HAVE recently heard a growing chorus of foreign policy experts, Israeli and American, raising doubts about the sincerity of President Assad's approach to the peace process.

It is clear that Assad took fright when he realized that the peace train was picking up steam and he was being left behind.

This is what gave rise to his initiative to convene the Alexandria summit with President Hafez of Syria and King Fahd of Saudi Arabia. What Assad was doing was looking for the best of both worlds: waging war while talking peace. But he suddenly found himself without anything to show for his ambiguity.

The return of the Syrian ambassador to Washington this week and the possible resumption of talks with Ambassador Itamar Rabinovich highlight, above all, Assad's discomfort at the doubts expressed about the seriousness of his intentions.

In this regard, the atmosphere in Israeli public opinion, which is closely monitored by Assad and which reflects growing fears and hesitations over a possible arrangement with Syria, is important. Assad has done little or nothing to assuage the doubts and fears of the Israeli public.

The Syrian leader needs to understand that the people of Israel broken.

It is thus vital that any arrangement have as a main element a built-in, drawn-out process, whereby every phase will enable the sides to face up to realities.

From a strategic point of view, it is essential too that the two sides agree on a period of years, which would enable Israel to evaluate the situation after Assad.

AS FAR AS the negotiations themselves are concerned, it is essential that Israel take into consideration the fact of Assad's ultimatum on the return of the Golan as his opening shot.

Against this, Israel must open with a parallel ultimatum, one emphasizing its vital security interest in retaining undisputed control of Lake Kinneret, a presence on Mount Hermon, and control of the part of the Heights that overlooks Israel.

There is an additional factor which has to be taken into consideration. Syria today has one of the largest armies in the world. Any agreement must include a provision for a meaningful reduction in the size of this army and in the weapons at its disposal.

This is one of the most important indicators of the success of a peace process; it is perhaps even more important than the deployment at any given time of the armed forces, which can be changed rapidly.

All discussions about negotiations with Syria tend to ignore the problem of who controls Lake Kinneret. Clearly Israel cannot agree to the Syrian army returning to positions on the shores of the lake. This would enable them once again to threaten Israel's control of its main water reservoir.

This is yet another compelling reason that emphasizes the importance of maintaining a position on the Heights. What we are engaged in is not, after all, an academic discussion on the pros and cons of different military approaches, but one which has a direct effect on the security and future of the country.

A possible US military presence shouldn't be rejected out of hand - provided it is seen as helping to create a quiet border between the two nations.

Syria must also be given an ultimatum that it expel the terrorist organizations of the so-called rejectionist from its territory. Assad could have done this at any time without any problem, but he and his henchmen have chosen to avoid the issue, coming up with all kinds of specious excuses.

The fact that Fathi Shikaki, head of the Islamic Jihad and the organizer of the Beit Lid massacre, runs his operation in Syria without any interference from Damascus is a blatant example of Syria's unacceptable approach to this problem.

Assad cannot go on enjoying the luxury of having it both ways: waging war against Israel, and making peace. As long as terrorist activities are mounted from Damascus, or Hizbullah operations from Syrian-controlled Lebanese territory, there is no room for compromise or any "understanding" of the Syrian leader's "problems."

We are negotiating with an obstinate and uncompromising leadership, and we must tread warily. We cannot afford not to react toughly. We must issue ultimatums.

After all, at this stage, Israel's cards add up to a stronger hand than Assad's.

The writer was Israel's sixth president.

History unclad

ELI WOHLGELERNTER

SINCE its inception, Yad Vashem has been trying, with dignity, decorum and sensitivity, to tell the story that cannot be told. No picture, no words, no video, no movie, no book, no one single survivor's testimony can really convey the events it tries to portray.

Against this backdrop, the Knesset nevertheless mandated Yad Vashem in 1953 to take on this impossible task.

Some 20 million people from all over the world, non-Jews and Jews of every denomination who relate to the Holocaust as a unifying experience, have made the trip to lives stood naked before anyone.

The pictures show, better than any words, the multilayered assault carried out against the Jews. Anyone seeing something sexual in these pictures is only exhibiting his own prudishness, even neurosis.

These rare photographs allow us searingly intimate access to what happened during the Holocaust. They convey, in a way that no statistic can, some of the tragedy, brutality and dehumanization that the Jews endured.

They are not on display for shock, let alone titillation. But the subject is inherently shocking. To hide or touch up the photographs would not only provide ammunition to Holocaust deniers; it would diminish our already feeble attempt to tell the story.

If that's how it happened, then that's how you show it. This historical nudity is historical reality.

While a point could be raised regarding respect for the dead, as well as for the viewer of the photos, it becomes invalid in light of the context in which it is presented. It also insults the intelligence of the visitor to Yad Vashem.

People go there with a particular, almost sacred, attitude to the subject, knowing they are going to see the horror of horrors. They've made that adjustment before going in, and that applies to the ultra-Orthodox as well.

Indecent, immodest? In the context of Yad Vashem, terms such as these are so faint as to seem totally inapplicable. Many exhibits are obscene, outrageous.

What about the crematoria? They are also the stark, unclad truth. No one would suggest they should be hidden.

We should be grateful for an exhibit that enables us, even partially, to identify with what was done to Jews by the Nazis.

The last thing we should be doing is "sanitizing" Yad Vashem.

The writer is a member of The Jerusalem Post editorial staff.

A sign of respect

AVRAHAM RAVITZ

THERE is a difference of opinion over whether photographs of naked women should continue to be displayed at Yad Vashem.

An issue that should have been handled with sensitivity and discretion was dealt with, on the one hand, by publicity-seeking individuals who claimed to be speaking in the name of the haredi community; and on the other, by anti-religious journalists and politicians who will seize any opportunity to attack the haredim. The subject is too important not to be taken seriously - and Yad Vashem's hasty reaction this week

We tend to forget that we are talking about real-life people, who had names, fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters.

The Holocaust wasn't an abstract concept. The people involved wore clothes, followed an occupation, and - most important of all - respected themselves and each other. It was only the Nazis who did not respect them.

How would we respond if someone recognized a brother or a sister in a picture, and asked us to respect the memory of his relative, his or her right not to be displayed naked for all the world to see?

Would we still argue that the public's right to know is more important than the feelings of the bereaved? And if no close relatives came and complained, because they too were murdered by the Nazis, aren't the victims the brothers and sisters of us all?

I also wonder whether displaying these pictures is the only way we can remember the acts of the Nazi beast. Would we display a picture of a Nazi using a Jewish girl to satisfy his lust? Surely we can remember how our sisters were raped and murdered and still not treat them with disrespect?

There is a final point. I want to remind the Yad Vashem directorate that the haredi sector is also part of Israeli society. For haredim, looking at pictures of naked bodies goes contrary to their beliefs.

Does Yad Vashem stand or fall by these pictures? Is there no way to make them more modest? Don't we want the haredi sector, too, to learn the many lessons Yad Vashem wants to impart, without feeling offended?

I do not agree with the way the subject was raised. I do not agree with the way Yad Vashem has been attacked. However, since the issue has already been publicly aired, I entreat Yad Vashem to give it further thought.

The writer, a United Torah Judaism MK, is the head of Degel Hatorah.

The last thing we should do is 'sanitize' Yad Vashem

Har Hazikaron to try to confront the incomprehensible, to try to learn what happened.

But now, suddenly after 25 years, something about that confrontation is wrong. A shot has been fired across Yad Vashem's bow, launched by the self-appointed skipper of the good ship Haredi, Haim Miller, deputy mayor of Jerusalem and head of a self-serving organization called the Association for the Rights of the Haredi Community.

Miller objects to a handful of photographs that show Jews naked, and has ordered Yad Vashem to cover the nudity or remove the photographs.

WHAT EXACTLY are these photographs that Miller finds so objectionable?

They are Nazi photographs of the Einsatzgruppen murdering the Jews of Liepaja, Latvia, in 1941. They show how these Jews were forced to undress before being shot, stripped of their dignity as well as their clothes. Their bewilderment is evident in the eyes of these modest women, who probably had never before in their

The women who were murdered by the Nazis had rights too showed that they were not thinking the question through.

I see no justification in viewing the debate as a conflict between religious and secular. It is a clash between two rights: individual privacy against the public's right to know - in this instance, the public's obligation to know. We must remember what was done to us by the Amalek of modern times.

But the women who were murdered by the Nazis had rights too, rights the Nazis trampled over in every way they could, including photographing them in their nakedness.

THERE IS no doubt in my mind that had those victims been asked whether they would agree to photos of their naked bodies being displayed for everyone to see - even for educational purposes - they would have refused. The pictures show very clearly how the women attempted to cover their private selves with their hands, the way they tried to preserve the rudiments of modesty.

Alleged ringleader of Trade Center bombing nabbed in Pakistan

LARRY NEUMEISTER
NEW YORK

THE Iraqi man portrayed as the mastermind of the World Trade Center bombing pleaded innocent yesterday after he was captured in Pakistan and secretly returned to New York.

Ramzi Ahmed Yousef, who fled the United States the night of the bombing two years ago, was arrested Tuesday at the Holiday Inn in Islamabad, Pakistan, officials announced Wednesday. He was brought to New York on a US government plane.

Yousef appeared calm and spoke fewer than 10 words during the brief appearance before US District Judge John F. Keenan. "I plead not guilty," he said in English, waving off an interpreter standing beside him.

The Iraqi-born Yousef, who lived most of his life in Kuwait, is charged with 11 counts relating to the bombing. The most serious charges are punishable by life in prison without parole. He told the judge he understood the indictment. The next appearance was set for Wednesday.

Yousef's assigned lawyer, Avraham C. Moskowitz, said he had met with him for only 30 minutes yesterday morning. He refused to comment about where his client had been for the last two years or about the arrest.

"He's in remarkably good spirits considering the ordeal he's been through," Moskowitz said. "We were able to have a meaningful discussion of the charges." President Clinton called the arrest "a major step forward in the fight against terrorism."

Authorities say Yousef, who came to the United States and applied for political asylum in 1992, bought and mixed the chemicals for the bombs that exploded February 26, 1993, in a van parked under the 110-story twin towers, the world's second-tallest buildings.

The blast killed six people, injured more than 1,000, caused $500 million in damage and heightened the fear of international terrorism in mainstream America.

Yousef, 27, escaped the night of the bombing, using an alias to fly to Iraq via Pakistan. His fingerprints were found on two bomb-making manuals seized by authorities and on containers of bomb-making chemicals, authorities say.

Pakistan's Interior Minister, Nasirullah Babar, said Yousef flew into Pakistan on Sunday using an Iraqi passport. He was using the alias Ali Khan and staying at a Holiday Inn, according to a senior Pakistani official speaking on condition of anonymity.

The US State Department had posted a $2 million reward for Yousef's capture. It was unclear if anyone would get the money.

Four men were convicted last March of carrying out the trade center bombing, and they received life sentences. Another suspect is still a fugitive; another pleaded guilty to a minor role.

Yousef's capture comes as 11 other men are on trial in New York, accused of plotting a campaign of urban terrorism designed to force the United States to change its policies in the Middle East. Prosecutors say the trade center bombing and the assassination of right-wing extremist Rabbi Meir Kahane were the opening salvos.

AVI Moskowitz's number came up on Wednesday. He was assigned to represent Ramzi Ahmed Yousef, accused of masterminding the World Trade Center bombing.

"It's an interesting position, and not a simple one," Moskowitz said in an interview.

Moskowitz, a 1977 college graduate of Yeshiva University, is a partner in the prestigious

New York law firm Anderson, Kill, Olick and Oshinsky.

He also signed up for a "criminal justice act panel," through which private attorneys agree to represent indigent clients in criminal cases. That was how he encountered Yousef, whom he first met before arraignment on yesterday morning.

"I was on duty for court-appointed cases yesterday," he told the Jerusalem Post.

"We live in a system where everyone's entitled to competent counsel," he said. "Not every case is attractive to a lawyer."

"If I continue with this case, which is a decision Mr. Yousef and I will be making, then I will do my job in that system professionally."

Rebels exit Grozny

GROZNY, Russia (Reuters) — Rebel fighters scaled down their forces in the Chechen capital of Grozny yesterday, virtually surrendering control to Russian troops after a six-week battle in which hundreds of people were killed.

But chief Chechen commander Aslan Maskhadov vowed the fight against Russian forces, who moved into mainly-Moslem Chechnya on December 11 to end its bid for independence, would go on.

"What's so special about one city? There is always the next city and the next village," Maskhadov told Reuters during a trip into Grozny's southwestern outskirts.

"The main thing is that people are getting used to this war. They are becoming disciplined. Soon it will be warm and we can fight in the mountains for 12 years."

In Moscow, the chief of the Russian general staff, Mikhail Kolesnikov, said he thought organized Chechen resistance was now virtually over.

Kolesnikov, quoted by Interfax news agency, said separatist leader Dzhokhar Dudayev had "gone mad and should be destroyed."

He also said 1,020 Russian soldiers had been killed since the fighting started, although soldiers in the field say the figure is much higher.

President Boris Yeltsin sacked two deputy defense ministers in what appeared to be the start of a widely-expected reshuffle of the Russian top brass following the bungled military campaign.

A presidential decree removed Colonel-General Georgy Konradiev, who opposed the operation, and Colonel-General Matvei Burakov, being probed in a corruption investigation.

Yeltsin's decree gave no explanations of the move, which many commentators had predicted in the wake of the military disaster in Chechnya under the control of beleaguered Defense Minister Pavel Grachev.

Grachev, under fire for the high death toll and the level of force used, said an analysis of the "army operation," which he declared over, would be made later this month.

Quayle decides not to run in '96

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Vice President Dan Quayle has decided not to enter the 1996 presidential race because of his difficulties raising enough money for a viable campaign, a senior adviser said yesterday.

Quayle made the decision late Wednesday night and planned to issue a statement yesterday, said Mark Goodin, who helped Quayle prepare for the possibility of a campaign.

French say antisemitism prevalent

PARIS (Reuters) — Nearly half the French believe antisemitism is somewhat, or even strongly, prevalent in their country, according to an opinion poll released on Wednesday.

The poll, for the Jewish weekly Tribune Juive, showed 11 percent of those polled believed antisemitism was strong in France and a further 38 percent said it was relatively prevalent.

About 44 percent of those polled said there was little or no antisemitism in the country. Seven percent had no opinion. France, the first European nation to extend full citizenship to Jews more than 200 years ago, has a Jewish community of about 750,000 among a general population of 58 million.

The poll showed 60 percent of the public believed a Jew could become president of France compared to 33 percent who said this was impossible and 7 percent who had no opinion.

The poll said 96 percent of the public was shocked by the desecration of Jewish cemeteries, 91 percent were shocked by revisionists who deny Nazi gas chambers existed and 83 percent were shocked by borderline-type statements made by extreme rightist leader Jean-Marie Le Pen about Jews.

Prosecutors: Kahane murder was salvo in war of urban terrorism

NEW YORK (AP) — A student who witnessed the assassination of Rabbi Meir Kahane recounted in detail on Wednesday the murder that prosecutors now believe was the opening salvo in a planned war of urban terrorism against the United States.

Ari Gottesmann, who witnessed the November 5, 1990, shooting in a Manhattan hotel, identified El Sayyid Nosair as the man who killed Kahane.

Trading icy stares with Nosair, Gottesmann gave a federal court jury virtually the same description of the killing that failed to convict Nosair of the murder in state court.

Nosair is now standing trial with 10 other Moslems accused of a much wider plan of terrorism to force the United States to change its policies in the Middle East, especially in Israel and Egypt.

The 11 men were allegedly led by Sheikh Omar Abdel-Rahman in a plan to assassinate Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and bomb the United Nations, FBI headquarters and two tunnels and a bridge connecting New York and New Jersey. The February 26, 1993 World Trade Center bombing that killed two people and injured more than 1,000 others also is alleged to be part of the terrorism campaign.

The prosecution is presenting evidence about the Kahane killing and the Trade Center bombing so that jurors can connect the terror conspiracy to concrete acts, and not just to plans that never made it off the drawing board.

Gottesmann pointed to Nosair and said he was 100 percent sure he was the man who shot Kahane.

During a full day on the witness stand, Gottesmann told how he went to watch Kahane speak in a midtown hotel and approached him afterwards during a question-and-answer period.

"Suddenly a gun was in my line of sight and it was going off," the 24-year-old student from Jerusalem told the jury.

"It sounded like two firecrackers, two very loud bangs. There were sparks and fire flying from the gun," he said.

Then, casting his arms above his head and falling back in the witness stand, he said, Kahane "went back with his arms up like this and blood fell down onto his shirt."

Asked to identify a photograph of Kahane on the ground, he said it depicted "Rabbi Kahane on the ground with blood pouring out of his neck or out of his head."

On cross-examination later, he told lawyer Roger Stavis he may have shouted, "Get the Arab," as he watched Nosair tuck the gun underneath his coat and try to escape.

Serbs blast Sarajevo

SARAJEVO (Reuters) — Bosnian Serb forces besieging Sarajevo launched a mortar barrage towards government army positions in the city yesterday, rocking a truce that has held since January 1, UN officials and witnesses said.

Machine-gun fire rattled out soon after the explosions hit in the vicinity of the Jewish cemetery. The front-line separating the mainly Moslem government army and the Bosnian Serbs runs through the cemetery.

"What we know is that at about 5:30 (p.m.) there were eight explosions in the vicinity of the Jewish cemetery from the BSA (Bosnian Serb army) side. Now everything is quiet," a UN spokeswoman, French Captain Miriam Souchaki, told Reuters.

There was no word on possible casualties, but Reuters correspondent Dan De Luce said the explosions reverberated through the city near the Holiday Inn hotel.

In Zagreb, headquarters of the UN peacekeeping mission in the former Yugoslavia, a spokesman said the Serbs unleashed the mortar barrage because the government troops had dug trenches in violation of the truce accord.

"We learned from a Bosnian Serb liaison officer that a local Serb commander fired eight heavy mortar rounds into the general area of the Jewish cemetery," spokesman Paul Risley said.

The Bosnian Serbs have been besieging Sarajevo for more than 1,000 days, during which time hundreds of civilians have been killed by sniper fire and shelling.

A cease-fire agreed to last four months has been holding since January 1, with no serious violations reported so far.

Rabin: Caught in the trap of his own creation

THE Rabin government is not unique in having trouble dealing with violations of an agreement that it signed.

What governments tend to do after they detect treaty violations was discussed in Foreign Affairs in 1961 by Fred Ikle, who later became a pivotal security figure in the Reagan administration.

The surprising point that Ikle makes is that most governments have a strong incentive not to do anything. Since many politicians have staked their national reputations on troubled treaties, he explains, underlining violations can damage public confidence in any government, especially if the public comes to perceive the treaty in question as a foreign policy failure.

Ikle refers to former British prime minister Stanley Baldwin, who revealed in the 1930s that because he feared losing an election, he would not admit to the British public that Germany had violated the Versailles Treaty.

Baldwin was not a central architect of Versailles, but acknowledging its failure would have required him to shift British foreign and defense policy into an entirely new direction that he was not prepared to force upon the voters — especially if it entailed massive rearmament.

Rabin appears to be affected by similar considerations.

Admitting the extent of PLO violations of the May 1994 Gaza-Jericho agreement ultimately undermines his own posture vis-à-vis the Israeli public. At the same time, it requires him to come up with an alternative course of action that he is not prepared to contemplate.

Indeed, real disclosure of what the PLO has done would make it extremely difficult for Foreign Minister Peres to obtain political backing in Congress for American funding of the Palestinian Authority.

AS A RESULT, most of the national monitoring of Israel's agreements with the PLO has fallen on the Knesset, rather than on the executive branch of government. This has increased the importance of the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee as a primary source of information about how the Israel-PLO agreements have been doing. Last month, MK Ze'ev Benyamini (Likud) revealed the existence of a document from the International Law Division of the IDF, written by Col. David Yahav, that detailed dozens of PLO violations of the Gaza-Jericho agreement.

Some of these violations have been only on the symbolic level. But most have entailed serious issues of security.

According to the document, the Palestinian Authority has failed to take serious action in investigating or preventing acts of terrorism. Israel has requested the extradition of known terrorists connected with the murder last summer of two Israelis from Ramle. This request has yet to be met.

Moreover, Palestinian Police weaponry has been used in terrorist actions, such as the October gun attack in central Jerusalem. Palestinian Police have crossed Israeli territory without any prior coordination with Israeli authorities. Both Palestinian security services and parts of the Palestinian Authority itself have been active in East Jerusalem, taking actions against Palestinians who are not under its jurisdiction.

A great deal of information would never reach any Knesset committee if the IDF were not willing to make it available.

In his first appearance before the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee on January 31, the new chief of staff, Lt.-Gen. Amnon Shahak, admitted that since the September 1993 Oslo agreement, Arafat's own organization, Fatah, had been involved "in more than one" terrorist attack.

The army has also admitted serious economic violations; last fall Maj.-Gen. Danny Rothchild told the committee that Arafat had diverted $20 million from the Palestinian Authority to the PLO-controlled Wakf in Jerusalem.

The Rabin government has had to work out a way of coping with greater public awareness that its agreement with the PLO is not working, short of stating outright that the whole effort has failed.

One method of demonstrating some toughness is to use the closure of the territories, rather than the threat to discontinue the negotiations, as leverage to make Arafat deal effectively with terrorism.

Thus Peres has stated that the closure will be lifted if the Palestinian Authority takes steps to reduce terrorist activity; Peres was clearly using the degree of Palestinian effort rather than the extent of performance as a criterion for the fulfillment of treaty obligations. "We're not asking for miracles and wonders," he added.

The government risks destroying its credibility by admitting the PLO's treaty violations, but ignoring them gives Arafat little incentive for living up to any undertaking, Dore Gold writes.

Another technique the government has employed is to leak its own privately stated discontent with the PLO. Thus, just a few days after the Cairo summit of Rabin, Mubarak, Hussein and Arafat, a detailed account of Rabin's harsh exchanges with Arafat appeared in the Israeli press. Rabin listed the same complaints that appeared in the IDF's list: Arafat had not supplied the names of the Palestinian Police he had drafted, as required by the Gaza-Jericho agreement; he had not disarmed the fundamentalists, and was creating a Lebanon of armed militias along Israel's border.

Looking at how most governments deal with such violations, Ikle noted that they tend to hope that problems will iron themselves out through continuing negotiations.

This seems to be the Rabin government's strategy in dealing with the PLO. But there is a price to be paid for this kind of approach.

In most cases, governments that cope with massive violations have to consider withdrawing from an existing treaty and thus are prone to conclude that such a drastic step can be destabilizing.

The Reagan administration did not withdraw from the 1972 ABM Treaty after Soviet violations in the 1980s; it simply also eroded the agreement.

The Israel-PLO case, however, is very different; the Oslo agreement was only an interim measure that was to be used as a test of the PLO. It was not a final status agreement.

But the Rabin government has not indicated to Arafat that it has any real alternative to the Oslo agreement, given PLO noncompliance. The failure to revise the PLO Charter and the increasing penetration of east Jerusalem by Arafat's administration have been excused and not addressed.

This creates a vicious circle, because then Arafat has little incentive to live up to any undertakings, knowing that Rabin ultimately has no choice but to implement Oslo.

Ironically, the Rabin government's flexibility in dealing with Arafat has become one of the strongest factors in undermining its own accord with the PLO.

Dehaishe will greet Palestinians as an occupying army

Refugee camp residents are apprehensive about a future under the Palestinian Authority, Steve Rodan reports

THE men sat in a circle in a cold dank room in the Dehaishe refugee camp outside Bethlehem. Their ages and status varied from elderly sheikh to young professionals.

Some were aligned with Yasser Arafat's Fatah faction of the PLO. Others were supporters of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine. Nobody admitted to being a supporter of Hamas or Islamic Jihad. All insisted on anonymity.

What brought them together for this discussion was their concern for the future of the area under the Palestinian Authority. For months, these men, leading activists in Dehaishe, had been closely following developments in Gaza and their worry was that the chaos and brutality there would eventually envelop them once Israel withdrew.

"If the Palestinian soldiers come here with their guns," one participant said, "then the young people in Dehaishe will regard them as those of an occupying army."

Dehaishe rests on the Jerusalem-Hebron highway about eight kms from the southern approach to the capital. The camp has an official population of 8,000, many of them refugees who fled from the Beit Shemesh and Jerusalem areas during the 1948 War of Independence.

The camp, which is surrounded by a tall fence erected by the IDF to stop stones being thrown at Israeli motorists, is sponsored by the United Nations' relief agency UNRWA. It is administered by 100 UN staffers.

The camp hosts several schools, a health center and dental clinic. It attracts many Western visitors - on this Sunday morning a US church delegation from Michigan was touring the camp.

While Dehaishe's dominant political groups are Fatah and the Popular Front, Hamas and the Islamic groups are said to comprise between five and 10 percent of residents. A large proportion of the inhabitants are university-educated, and many of the young women wear slacks and do not cover their hair.

"In Dehaishe, there is a long history of nationalism and grassroots organizations," said Maya Rosenfeld, a researcher now writing a doctorate on Dehaishe at the Hebrew University. "They have had powerful youth and women's groups and operated on the basis of decentralization and democracy. They paid a heavy price for their political behavior and sat in jail for many years."

The expectation of Palestinian rule in Dehaishe has set the camp on edge. Several disputes have erupted over land ownership. The civil administration has issued orders to demolish five homes illegally built over the camp's boundaries.

In addition, UNRWA is battling efforts to build illegally on about 15 dunams within the camp - attempts which have resulted in sabotage of UN facilities. Sami Smhasha, an UNRWA public information officer, said the land is being reserved for Palestinian refugees from abroad who, under the Israel-PLO accord, are expected to return to the territories and will need housing.

"We have made it clear that this land is to be used for any new refugees, either for their housing, or for any project needed by the camp," Smhasha said. "We plan on taking legal action against anyone trying to encroach upon this land."

For these activists, the Gaza experiment of Palestinian self-rule has been a disappointment. In the nearly 10 months that the PA has been in existence, services have not improved in the refugee camps in the Strip.

Indeed services have deteriorated, they said. There has been little coordination between the PA and UN authorities as the lines of authority have been blurred. Moreover, the advent of Palestinian self-rule has led to a decrease in donations to UNRWA, further cutting back services. The activists said Palestinians have not benefited from the donations of Western countries.

A tall fence erected by the IDF to prevent stone-throwing surrounds the Dehaishe refugee camp. (Karen Ben-Zion)

Furthermore, they fumed as they recalled how Israeli companies were awarded contracts that, they felt, should have gone to Palestinian firms. One was for a $3-million contract to provide the PA with office furniture.

"The foreigners who come here laugh at us," the activist leading the discussion, said. "They say, 'Palestinians don't get preference even from your own government?'"

The sheikh agreed: "Nothing has changed in Gaza, even with Arafat there. The only change is nobody in Gaza needs an identity card."

Dehaishe, meanwhile, is slowly coming under Arafat's rule, the activists said. PA representatives visit the camp daily. Several days earlier, an unnamed high-ranking PA official toured Dehaishe.

What is more unsettling, according to the activists, is the network of security agents being established in the camp. The Israeli collaborators in Dehaishe have long been driven out or stopped operating. Today, Jibril Rajoub, the PA's security chief in Jericho, has installed his men in the camp.

The feeling among Dehaishe activists is that the Palestinians leadership might not bode any better for them than the Israeli occupiers. But, like many Palestinians, they have high expectations of democratic elections.

But will there be elections, the activists wondered. There are plenty of candidates, they said: local boys who spent years in jail fighting Israel and are now heroes in the community. Young professionals with the promise of developing a modern community.

"They're the real representatives," opined a middle-aged, successful professional. "They felt the suffering, not the ones who spent their lives in Tunis and Algeria."

The activists, however, were not convinced that is what Arafat wants. "We don't understand democracy in a scientific way," one participant said. "Sometimes we appoint and don't elect. If we behave in a dictatorial way and appoint people, it will destroy what we are now trying to build," he added.

The participants agreed that the call for democracy will cut across party lines. In Dehaishe, they said, the pro-Arafat Fatah and the anti-peace process Popular Front are ready to make an alliance against any PA attempt to prevent free elections.

"Fatah will be the first to stand up to the PA," one activist said.

The activists' fear of the PA is accompanied by their anger toward the Israelis. Daily, they watch Israelis commute from their homes in the territories to Jerusalem while Palestinians are banned by the IDF closure.

The Dehaishe residents pass what they regard as luxurious Jewish settlements, which they constantly fear will expand, to return to a camp where sewage flows freely.

One activist remembered what he described as the good old days. In the 1970s, he said, a Palestinian could travel and work anywhere in Israel. The money was good and there was personal freedom.

"Today, you can't walk into a supermarket without being looked at as a terrorist," he said.

The Dehaishe activists are not happy with the Rabin government's deliberations over separating Palestinians from Israelis.

"They said they still want access to Israeli health services and jobs. They stressed they will not tolerate living under conditions similar to that of Gaza."

But can the Palestinians claim collective rights to Israeli jobs and services without collective responsibility for preventing terror attacks?

After a long pause, the senior member of the group responded: "Israel needs peace more than us. The Israeli leadership has to understand this. We are millions and can withstand suffering for a long time."

Fatal assault on an immigrant family's dreams

The Gaza terrorists who gunned down a security guard also killed an immigrant family's hopes, Batsheva Tsur writes

THE Gromov family of Ashkelon, one-and-a-half years in the country, were on their way to becoming an aliyah success story. Yevgeny, the father, had found a job that he enjoyed; Galina, the mother, had temporary work; their nine-year-old son, also called Yevgeny, had integrated well into the Nof Yam primary school.

They earned enough to rent a duplex next to the sea, had made friends with their veteran Israeli neighbors, and seemed ready to live happily ever after.

Early Monday, Yevgeny Gromov left the house with his assault rifle. As usual, he and a second guard were due to accompany a gasoline truck to Gaza. Just beyond Nahal Oz, the convoy was ambushed by terrorist gunmen and Gromov, who managed to return fire, died a few minutes later.

YEVGENY and Galina met on a warm autumn night in 1984, in the southeast Russian city of Kuibyshev, formerly Samara. "I was walking downtown with a girlfriend when two guys came by. One of them [Yevgeny] stopped to look at me, then asked if they could join us," Galina recalled this week. "It was stuffy inside so we all walked around outdoors. When we parted, he took my telephone number."

Yevgeny called immediately and asked her out the next night. "He always knew exactly what he wanted," Galina said.

"He was 21, I was 22. I took great care putting on my makeup and chose my best clothes. He showed up for the date in work clothes, and I wanted to go home. 'You can't go,' he said to me. 'You are going to marry me.'"

After two months of persistent

Yevgeny Gromov: He was known as an optimistic and strong person.

courting, Galina agreed and they married in December. She graduated as a pediatrician at a hospital specializing in infectious diseases. He continued working at a metal factory, at the same time earning a degree in ballistic engineering. Eventually, he became manager of the plant.

After perestroika, Yevgeny began a private business and started making arrangements to come to Israel. With a sister in Ashkelon, he decided they should head for the coastal town. They started off in an apartment with his sister Marina and, within a week, Yevgeny had a job - as a street sweeper. From there, with a sprinkling of Hebrew and combat experience, it was not long before he landed work with the guard company.

"He decided, and so we came [to Israel]," Galina said. But she liked the choice. "Ashkelon is a friendly place. After the usual hassles new immigrants go through, [son] Yevgeny has settled down at school and has Israeli friends. And we can smell the sea from our house. It is like a sanatorium, so healthy for the boy."

While Galina was studying for the Israeli medical certification exams, Yevgeny was intent on supporting the family. "But it wasn't only for the money that he chose to work as a guard," she said. "He always wanted to be a fighter. He would clean his gun lovingly at home. He had served in the Red Army. He knew there were dangers involved in going to Gaza, but he wanted to remain at that job. He didn't opt for an engineering course, even though I tried to persuade him."

GALINA continued: "I am an invalid now. Yevgeny was my wall. He always gave me strength. I have no one to lean on now."

"His philosophy was that a man must do everything for the family. He lost his mother when he was very little and saw his father doing everything."

Her son is already trying to step into his father's shoes. "This morning, he asked me if I would prefer him to stay home or go to school. He took my hand and told me not to worry because he would always be at my side. He looks exactly like his father. That's why Yevgeny wanted us to call him after him."

She pondered this thought. We had been talking for more than an hour on the telephone. Then she blurted out: "I think he always had the feeling he would die young."

"It has just struck me," she said. "I feel he had a premonition of his death in the past few days. There was something about him, something inside which he didn't want to let come out, which made him look very sad and worried recently. It wasn't because I failed the medical exam. He knew I was planning to try again soon. I had just got a job at a florist, so we had extra money. He had no intention of leaving his job. He just seemed to have this strange feeling."

There was whispering in Russian. Then Marina, who would like to remember her brother differently, came to the phone and said: "Yevgeny was not unhappy. He was an idealist and an optimist. He was the type who was the life of a party. Only this week, we were talking and he said, 'The kid has settled down well. I have lots of strength. Everything is great.'"

Their cries were heard

TWENTY-FOUR new immigrants have been killed in terrorist incidents since 1990 and another 25 have been injured, Ruth Bar-On, head of the Public Council for Soviet Jewry, noted after this week's attack. Galina Gromov's husband Yevgeny was the most recent victim.

Gromov is alone and in shock. She also has a child to support. She has no family in Israel other than her sister-in-law, who is also an immigrant. Gromov speaks good Hebrew considering the amount of time she has lived here, but she thinks she has lost the job where she started working only a week before her husband's murder. Moreover she has not passed the medical exams that would have enabled her to get permanent work as a physician.

This is where volunteer organizations, like the council, and governmental and public bodies are trying to fill the gap.

"Many people have been here. It has helped me a lot," Gromov said two days after her husband was killed. She added that she was too confused to know who they were, although she remembered social workers from the municipality. Neighbors have brought in food.

Now Gromov is awaiting her mother, who will arrive next week to help her decide where she goes from here. Her mother is being flown here by the council. Two of the council's volunteers have offered to be at her disposal day and night; one of the volunteers is Marina Lashtover, who is Gromov's age and whose security-guard husband was fatally shot near Jerusalem's Old City last March.

The Absorption Ministry dispatched workers from its local office to help make burial arrangements and assess the family's needs, the ministry spokesman said. The family will receive long-term assistance from a ministry fund set up to deal with special cases. In addition, the spokesman said, the family will be provided with public housing, even if there are no provisions for such housing allocations.

"There are other tragedies like mine in this country," Gromov acknowledged. "I need time to relax and then I will try to manage."

Israel still looking for a place to hang its hat in the UN

Despite the return of Israel to the international fold, it still hasn't found its place in 'the club.' Marilyn Henry reports from New York

AN Israeli envoy to the United Nations used to have a guaranteed pulpit in the General Assembly 11 times a year, reserved for debate on the "question of Palestine."

Much has changed. Ambassador Gad Ya'acobi addressed the General Assembly 11 times in the session just ended, often on issues expanding Israel's traditional horizons.

But while Israel has made the shift from client to colleague at the UN, acceptance — the kind that goes without saying — is elusive. Israel has yet to become a member of the club. Instead, it is distinguished as the only state that cannot join a geopolitical group in which much of the business of the international community gets its first hearing.

"This is one of the most crucial issues," Ya'acobi said in an interview, "because you cannot achieve full normalization and full participation unless you are part of a geopolitical group."

The UN is a committee-happy institution. But what some call the backbone of the organization — the web of regional groups — is not itself part of the official UN structure. Instead, it is anchored by sheer endurance.

The regional groups are the arenas where member states can hammer out positions that, ideally, serve each nation. The groups then can advance a regional stance in larger forums.

The groups are based on the notion that no region should be given short shrift in the international organization. It is through the regions that candidates for the powerful Security Council and the Economic and Social Council are presented to the General Assembly.

There are five permanent members of the Security Council — the US, China, Russia, Britain and France. The 10 so-called nonpermanent seats are allotted by region in an effort to ensure an equitable geographic representation. Groups caucus to decide which state they might nominate for a council opening designated for their specific regions. If members can agree on a candidate, they avoid a contested election on the floor of the General Assembly. (Such a contest is expected next year, when Indonesia will vacate an Asian seat on the Security Council. This week, Japan joined India and the Philippines in publicly expressing interest in the seat.)

When a state wants a council seat, it makes its first pitch to its group. That leaves Israel talking to itself, because its natural geographic affiliation would place it with the Arab states. And that door is closed.

"We cannot, unfortunately, be a member because it needs a consensus" of the group, Ya'acobi said. "I don't foresee that Iran and Iraq will enthusiastically support the inclusion of Israel."

LOOKING for a place to hang its hat, Israel approached the "Western Europe and Others" group, which bears a striking resemblance to the European Union, with the addition of Canada, Australia and New Zealand. The US tends to be associated with this group, as well.

"We thought this was a natural group to be in because it is not a geographic group per se, but based on some common value, democracy," Ya'acobi said.

But as Israel would need consensus from the Arabs to join the West Asia group, so it would need such a vote from Europe. Despite the sea change in relations at the UN, the European states collectively are not inclined to give Israel such a boost.

Some of them are very reluctant to have another country and to share with this country the privileges and the representation," the Israeli ambassador said.

"From time to time, some of those countries say, 'We are not opposed to your candidacy, if nobody else will oppose it,'" he said. "This was the reaction of Britain [and] France, but they rely on others to oppose, so they can say they will not oppose."

A handful of Israelis hold high-level positions in UN organizations, posts they earned without the influence of a group. Pinna Herzog, who has just retired as a Health Ministry deputy director-general, was recently elected first vice-chairman of the World Health Organization executive. Hebrew University law professor David Kretzmer was elected to the UN Commission on Human

The flag of Israel — unlike the country itself — is a full-fledged equal among nations at the UN.

Rights.

Herzog and Kretzmer were elected on merit, not on geographical quota. And while each such election is another notch toward normalization, it is also a reminder that Israelis in some professional fields have a degree of acceptance that Israel itself has yet to attain.

Israel's interest in getting its foot in the group door says more about trying to shed its outsider status than endorsing the group.

As nations' common interests tend to be less territorial than substantive, geography as a basis for alliance has severe limits. However natural they appear, few regional groups can address or serve their members' basic needs.

The geography of Japan, for instance, places it in the Far Eastern group, which is where it sits when the time comes to consider nominations for UN council seats. But when Japan wants to grapple with the nuts and bolts of its domestic and international concerns, Tokyo looks elsewhere. It turns to states with similar economic, technical and intellectual interests, which, along with the US, happen to be in the "Western Europe and Others" group.

"Groups are one of those anachronistic features that have not necessarily kept abreast of the changes in the world," said one European diplomat at the UN.

Israel has company on the sidelines: Slovenia and Estonia. Proviously, the Soviet Union and Yugoslavia had been in the Eastern European group. When those nations splintered, their successor states moved into the same group, often quite reluctantly. Some states that were historically linked with the Soviet bloc wanted to join the Western group instead.

Unlike Israel, which is still waiting for its invitation to a party, Slovenia and Estonia were expected by the Eastern Europeans. They just chose not to attend.

If Israel is excluded from the Arabs' West Asia group, a number of Western states say privately, that should not bar its participation elsewhere. It hardly seems sporting that rejection by one group results in rejection by all. The Israelis agree.

"We are the only country in the world that has no alternative group. We want to be affiliated to, but not a member of, the West European group," said a member of the Israeli mission to the UN, who asked to remain anonymous. "Then we would be able to use the rights of members to present people for positions that are based on the geographical group."

"We see ourselves as a Western democracy. But if they let Israel in, there would be claims from other [former Soviet bloc] states to join the group. They don't want to open the club."

MKs do Amman – royally

It was a typically Israeli affair when MKs joined King Hussein for supper, Liat Collins writes from Amman

KNESSET Speaker Shevah Weiss seems to have adopted as his motto, "Have gavel, will travel."

His latest, and briefest, trip was to the Hashemiyeh Royal Palace in Amman Sunday night for supper with King Hussein and Crown Prince Hassan.

The company included what has been dubbed "the Knesset Flying Class" – a group of 28 MKs, comprising the heads of all the Knesset factions and committees and the seven deputy speakers.

The party flew from Ben-Gurion Airport like a band of schoolmates setting out on the sort of educational-but-fun excursion you have to afterwards describe in class.

Like most school trips, it started with some of the participants suddenly remembering what they had forgotten to bring. MKs Yigal Bibi (NRP) and Shlomo Benizri (Shas) had left their passports at home. They did what most travelers would do in the same circumstances – first they panicked and then they looked for a friend who could help.

They didn't have to search far. Likud MK Yehoshua Matza, sitting a few seats behind them on the bus, used his influence as chairman of the Knesset Interior Committee and sorted out the problem with a borrowed mobile phone.

At the airport, the MKs proved that they truly reflect the national culture.

The elected representatives of the Israeli people could not keep out of the duty-free stores – with shopping lists ranging from sports shoes to an electric organ (for Shas MK Yosef Azran's son). Take-off was almost delayed by the effort to separate the parliamentarians from the goods.

The Royal Jordanian Airbus was another of those peace-process phenomena which attract the overused adjective "first."

It was the first Royal Jordanian plane to land at Ben-Gurion Airport. It had not come far, at least in terms of physical distance. During the 20-minute flight there wasn't enough time for coffee, a movie or even the standard life-jacket prep talk.

The King and I: King Hussein greets Post reporter Liat Collins; Crown Prince Hassan and Knesset Speaker Shevah Weiss look on. (The other person to the right is Ma'ariv's Tal Shahaf)

But it was long enough for Likud MK Naomi Blumenthal to sing several rounds too many of "Hevenu Shalom Aleichem" while the stewardesses – all Irish – handed out Thai orchids and flight-crew smiles.

Deputy Speaker Dov Shilansky (Likud), who abstained from the vote on the peace treaty with Jordan, loudly declared he was "traveling to a part of Eretz Yisrael I've never been to before."

Azran told anyone who showed interest what blessing should be recited on seeing a king.

THE CONVOY of black Mercedes took longer to reach the palace from the airport than the flight had taken to reach the capital.

It was a disappointment. The building, or what we saw of it, resembles a five-star hotel. There was lots of marble and there were lots of chandeliers, but where were the fountains, mosaics and gold decorations that Hollywood had created in our minds?

An even greater disappointment was in store – where was the queen? Although we were to meet the king, the only sight of his wife was a gilt-framed photo on a wooden table.

We later learned the queen had not been invited, to keep the event businesslike rather than social.

Certainly, Prince Hassan got right down to basics.

After greeting the MKs with a biblical quote in passable Hebrew, he launched into a detailed lecture in English. Those expecting a general speech of the sort the Prime Minister's Office pulls off its computer were surprised instead to hear a well-prepared talk accompanied by fact sheets and slides.

"Now is the time to move from peace-making to peace building," Hassan explained. "We need to translate the euphoria of peace into terms easily understandable to the farmer and store holder."

He emphasized that the Jordanian public has yet to feel the concrete results of peace and needs to see the economic benefits.

"We need to act against the political cynicism of those who ask 'What now?'" Hassan said. "But we should not be forced into adopting an apologetic tone when talking about the peace."

He also warned that it is vital for each side to develop a cultural-religious dialogue within its own communities before trying the same with each other.

It was food for thought at a dinner which had to cater to all religious sensibilities.

The Orthodox Jews asked for a vegetarian meal; the religious Moslems wanted the traditional meaty dishes on which to break the Ramadan fast.

The kashrut observers lost. Many even envied the foresight of Haizofeh reporter Yona Cohen, who produced homemade sandwiches from his bag as if he were sitting in a cafeteria rather than a royal dining room.

While Cohen munched on cheese and bread, others had a feast fit for a king – two types of salmon, a selection of dips like humous and eggplant; cream of mushroom soup; mutton in vegetables; steak fillets in mushroom sauce; pasta in tomato; sole fried in almonds; chicken slices and a variety of salads.

The desserts created a test in self-control – cream caramel.

chocolate mousse, rice pudding, apple pie, pancakes and chocolate torte.

Although we never met the queen, we admired her – anyone who can keep slim when faced daily with those dishes must have very strong willpower.

After supper, it was time for the king's address. Unlike his brother, Hussein kept his speech brief and general. He said he hoped the direct contacts would build a lasting peace "to serve as an example to others in the region, and to create a lasting peace for generations to come, so that the forces of peace would overcome the shadows of darkness."

Weiss responded with similar sentiments and re-extended President Ezer Weizman's invitation to visit Israel. Later he joked that he hoped he would have more than two days in which to prepare for the return visit, unlike the Israeli trip to Amman.

Apparently, although the MKs' visit had been mooted for a long time, it was kept under wraps until the last moment for fear of offending Moslem fundamentalists.

And the MKs found it hard to ignore a front page Jordan Times article on the day of the supper which reported that "lawmakers affiliated with the powerful Islamic Action Front bitterly criticized the visit by the Israeli legislators."

The Front, which holds 16 of the 80 seats in the Jordanian parliament, said the visit "offended the feelings of the Jordanian people, who will see the enemies of the [Arab] nation, the occupiers and the war criminals on their national soil."

When questioned about the story, Hassan smiled.

"That's progress," he said. "The Islamic Action Front completely opposed the peace treaty, but they only 'strongly criticized' your visit."

Back home the next day MK Yitzhak Levy (NRP) complained to Weiss about the lack of kosher food. Trips to Arab countries have become so common lately that the only hitch is over the menu.

Now that's progress.

Quick, send for Rambo Barak and superman Ramon

COULD Haim Ramon, sipping tea in his nondescript Histadrut office, leap at any moment into super-cloak and tights and fly out of the fifth-floor window to save his government, party and nation from perdition?

Now that Shas has finally made up its mind to opt for the opposition, everyone agrees that a cabinet face-lift is urgently needed, and many think the only ones capable of lifting those flaccid jaws could be Superman Haim Ramon and Ehud Barak.

These two super-jocks – one an ex-soccer player and impressive political in-fighter, the other a war hero who made it to chief-of-staff – have that tempting political combination of boyish charm and get-things-done macho appeal.

THE WEEK THAT WAS

gasping from a surprise low blow.

Kol Yisrael's military correspondent Carmela Menashe was asked in an interview program to sum up the difference between the outgoing Barak and his successor, Amnon Lipkin-Shahak.

Creasing her brow and summoning the resources of her strategic knowledge and military-reporter insights, Carmela bit her lip and finally let slip that snippet of intelligence eagerly awaited by friends and enemies tuned in from afar:

"Shahak is more attractive."

DOUBLE DEALS
LABOR HAS no fewer than two teams working out Ramon's return.

One, headed by MK Elie Goldschmidt, is looking into legal ways to revoke Ramon's expulsion from the party.

The other, a gaggle of Ramon's dovish Knesset groupies, is trying to persuade the man himself that all is forgiven and no one will remember how he betrayed his party, spurned its codes, and left it in anarchic ruins.

Spearheading this track is tourism minister and friend Uzi Baram, who sped from Jerusalem for a weekend shnootze at Ramon's home in Ramat Hasharon.

The rosy scenario: Ramon returns to Labor, the Ram and Labor factions in the Histadrut unite, and everyone lives happily ever after.

"Nonsense," said a cheery Ran Cohen, Histadrut parliament chairman. "Ramon may return to Labor. But a Ram-Labor union – set a committee to sniff out certain money-allocation practices.

This, of course, could not be one of the reasons why Shas is screaming about his getting the post.

special privileges in religious and financial affairs.

Then it sidled into opposition. And now, not only does it still want Rabin to keep all his agreements, but insists on the right to block Rabin's freedom to choose whoever he wants to fill the two abandoned Shas ministries.

Not surprisingly, some anger at Shas is raging through Labor. Even this party has a humiliation threshold.

"Who the hell asked them?" snarled one senior party source at Aryeh Deri's hints that prima donna Shas would prefer a ma'sorti minister in Interior and Religious Affairs, rather than Baram or – satanic horrors – a Meretz minister. "Shas cannot rule from outside," said Baram. When Baram last held this ministry, he set a committee to sniff out certain money-allocation practices. This, of course, could not be one of the reasons why Shas is screaming about his getting the post.

SPICE HUNTERS

THERE ARE no official figures, but more and more Jerusalemites are migrating to Tel Aviv. Not just for the spices in Levinsky Market, or the ghostly furniture in Herzl Street; not even for the winter, but for good.

The new arrivals from Jerusalem have a bewildered air as, hands on foreheads, they wander around repeating to themselves the ravings of a certain deputy mayor of the capital which haunt them still.

Deputy Mayor Haim Miller, that is, who suddenly perceived "pornography" in the grim Yad Vashem photographs of naked Holocaust victims.

Miller, of Shas, and his spiritual sidekick Shmuel Meir (NRP), another deputy mayor (do they clone?), are stark symbols of the Olmert era, complain the fleeing had-enoughniks.

Ma'ariv columnist Tommy Lapid mused on Miller and noted that "you have to be either a sex pervert or a bareheaded rabbi to see pornography in the nude photographs at Yad Vashem."

Anyone who can see in these pictures anything which arouses desire, added Lapid, "is a miserable wretch, perhaps even mentally deranged. One thing he is not: a Jew. Because he sees in those photographs what no Jew sees in them, and does not see what every Jew sees in them."

'Rambo' Barak could give jowly Labor a face-lift.

forget it."

But the Meretz Cohen would not be averse to a Ramon-Meretz list in 1996.

CHESS

Is teaching chess bad for one's play? There are conflicting opinions on this.

Working on chess with promising young players can be stimulating, but teaching weaker players can be more dangerous. To prevent them from making obvious errors, you may be tempted to teach them easy-to-remember rules: Develop knights before bishops; never put a knight on the edge of the board; rooks should go behind passed pawns.

The drawback for the teacher is you actually start thinking this way and, instead of playing spontaneously and intuitively, become robotic and stilted. Disciples of doctrines may appear knowledgeable, but they miss the subtlety that divides them from genuinely strong players.

If a pupils is mated on the back rank, it is tempting to tell him to move a kingside pawn early to prevent such disasters. But ask a grandmaster whether one should castle early, and he will give some diplomatic answer such as: "It all depends on the position."

There are no easy answers. Making room for your king by advancing a pawn might be a good idea, but it can weaken your kingside. It all depends on the position. The following game was played in the recent Hastings Challengers tournament.

Volzhen, A. - Davies, N.
Nimzo-Indian Defense

1.d4 Nf6 2.c4 e6 3.Nc3 Bb4 4.e3 0-0 5.Bd3 d5 6.Nf3 c5 7.0-0 Nc6 8.a3 Bxc3 9.bxc3 Qc7 10.h3 dxc4 11.Bxc4 e5 12.Ba2 e4 13.Nb2 Ne7 14.c4 Nf5 15.d5 Qe5 16.Rb1 Nc6 17.Bb2 Qe5 18.Kh1 Nf5 19.Qe1 Bc7 20.Qc3 Rf8 21.Bb3 E2 22.a4 Re7 23.Bd1 f4?

Deciding upon an interesting double pawn sacrifice in order to penetrate on the light squares.

24.Bxh5 Qxh5 25.exf4 e3 26.fxe3 Bf5 27.Rc1 Rxe8 28.Ng3

White's 10.h3 was played with strategic ideas in mind and in itself is by no means bad. But it also creates a weakness which Black exploits with his next move (see above diagram).

28...Bxh3! 29.gxh3 Qxh3+?

Overlooking White's 31st move in the mutual time scramble after which an interesting game rapidly degenerates. 29...Nf5!! would set up terrible threats to which we found no good defense in the postmortem. 30.Nh2 Ne4 31.Rf3! Qxf3+ 32.Nxf3 Nxe3 33.Bxc3 Rxc3 34.Ng5 Rf8 35.Be5 Rf5 36.Rd1! Rxe5! 37.fxe5 Rxe5 38.d6 Re8 39.Rb1 Rd8 40.Rxb7 Rxd6 41.Rxa7 Rd4 1/2-1/2

A GRAND Masters' Tournament is slated to start today at 3 p.m. at the Cafe Apropos in Rishon LeZion.

Players participating in the tournament are Alexander Goldin, Ronen Har-Zvi, Emil Sutovsky, Alex Finkel, Eran Liss, Mikhail Oratovsky, Boris Alterman, Leonid Shmutter, Avigdor Bihovsky, Viktor Mikhailevsky, Artur Kogan and myself.

Play will continue until February 22, with free days on February 18 and 21.

THIS WEEK'S problem is from another Hastings Challengers game in which I played Black against Jurgen-Gersinska of Germany. Black to play and win (see diagram).

Solution: Once again the weakness of White's kingside was shown up with 1...Bxh3! after which 2.gxh3 Qxh3+ 3.Kg1 Rxc6 left White facing the threat of mate with 4...Rg6. In desperation he played 5.Bh5 Nxd2 6.Rxc6 bxc6 7.Qxd2 Qxh5 8.Nd4 but after 8...Rd6 found himself facing the same threats anyway with a deficit of two pawns.

Egyptian vultures like this one can be seen in the wadis surrounding the Kinneret.

Sites for bird-watching

NATURE

D'VORA BEN SHAUL

WINTER is a very good time for bird-watching, particularly if you want to see migratory waterfowl and other winter residents.

Some bird-watching can easily be done in the garden or a nearby park or field where there are shrubs and trees. But for serious waterfowl observation you will probably need to go where there are more birds.

Wherever you live there is probably a good site nearby. Such places are also wonderful places for winter hikes, which are much easier on a sunny winter day than in the hot season; and almost all sites are excellent places to have a picnic and see wildflowers.

In the north, the best place to observe waterfowl and a lot of other birds is the Golan, where small ponds and lakes often have flocks of wintering ducks, especially tufted ducks, pochard and widgeon.

In the grasslands there are winter flocks of chaffinches, greenfinches, goldfinches and finches, with the occasional brambling.

Also, be sure to look for both Calandra and Isabelline larks. Isabelline is a special color of dirty white that is specifically a zoological term and appears in many species.

The origin is said to date from Queen Isabella of Spain, who vowed not to change her clothes until her king returned from the Crusades. He was gone over a decade and the color "Isabelline" is said to be that of her garments when he got home.

Surprisingly, the Kinneret doesn't attract many waterfowl, only small numbers of grebes and ducks. But the area surrounding the lake, including Wadi Amud and Wadi Yehudiya, is rich in Egyptian and griffon vultures.

In the Beit She'an area, storks and wading birds, such as egrets and herons, and large numbers of ospreys, can be seen.

In the central region, many ducks and geese converge on ponds. The areas of Ma'ayan Zvi and Ma'agan Michael have been made a wildlife refuge, and are rich in flocks of great black-headed gulls, Temnick's stints, all three species of kingfishers and a growing number of citrine wagtails.

Jerusalem doesn't strike most people as a good place for bird-watching, but since the city is surrounded by forests and orchards it's possible to spot many Syrian woodpeckers and short-toed eagles.

Lesser kestrels are so common they nest right in the city on balconies and rooftops. In the orchards, there are spectacular flocks of yellowhammers and a few pine buntings.

But don't leave out the desert areas, which are popular wintering sites for passerine songbirds, raptors and even waterfowl around desert winter pools.

The best places are in the Dead Sea area, the Negev mountains, the Arava, and Eilat, where more migrating fowl can be seen than in almost any other place on earth.

SOME of the world's top players are in town this week for the Israeli International Bridge Festival, which takes place daily at the Israeli Convention Center.

The top events this week include: a two-session mixed pairs on Sunday, February 12; a three-session open pairs starting on Monday; two one-session pairs games, Tuesday night and Wednesday afternoon; and a three-session Swiss teams, starting Wednesday night.

Afternoon sessions begin at 4, evening sessions at 8. The festival is sponsored by the Dubek cigarette company, and there is prize money in every event.

Sponsorship by corporations is not new to bridge. One of the first companies to offer substantial prizes was the Lancia corporation of Italy, 20 years ago. Together with Alitalia Airlines, it sent an all-star team to America to challenge four teams from New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and Miami. The team was to play in all four cities and if it lost, the American winners would each receive a new Lancia car.

Of course, it was not considered easy to defeat the Lancia team, because it included Italian Blue Team stars Benito Garozzo, Pietro Forquet and Giorgio Beladonna, plus actor Omar Sharif, who is also a top-notch bridge player. But, miraculously, the team lost three out of the four matches, and the Lancia company had to make good on 13 cars.

Forquet, of Naples, is one of the stars that Israeli bridge players will get a chance to kibitz or play against this week. He was sitting North in today's diagram, which comes from the New York match. Forquet, who has 14 world championships to his credit, was partnered by Sharif.

After three passes, Sharif opened the bidding one heart with the South hand and West made an overcall of two diamonds. Forquet now cuebid three diamonds, an artificial bid that invited a game in hearts. If he had jumped to three hearts directly over two diamonds, he would have been showing a weak hand, so he had to cuebid to show the limit raise. Unfortunately for him, the cuebid allowed East to double. This double was the key to success for the defense, because West now got off to the killing lead of a diamond against Sharif's four-heart contract.

On the first trick, East played his queen of diamonds and Sharif won the ace. Sharif did his best by quickly cashing the ace of trump, dropping the king, and continuing with the jack. East won the queen of hearts on the second round and led a diamond to his partner. West cashed the ace of clubs and led a third round of diamonds, trumped in dummy and over-trumped by East with the nine of hearts. This was the setting trick.

Recently, at a panel show held at a tournament at the Dead Sea, the following question was posed to some of Israel's leading players: What is the biggest flaw in the average player's game? Matilda Lorer answered: "They play too many conventions."

Perhaps Forquet's three-diamond cuebid was an example, at the highest level, of how a convention can backfire, even in the hands of the world's best. Had he been able to jump to three hearts to invite game, rather than having to go through the route of cuebidding first, he would have avoided the lead-directing double by East, and West would probably have led a spade.

FORSAKE ME NOT

THE poverty and deprivation revealed by the media are the tip of the iceberg and we ignore it at our peril. So what can we do? From a macro point of view, not much. But from a micro perspective - plenty.

Working with social workers, we provide funds contributed by you. Many parents can't afford to pay the "extras" at school for going to museums or the theater, for materials for art lessons and trips. We help.

Israel's medical services don't pay for children who need glasses or dental treatment. We help. Large families need to pay a fortune for school books. We help. Shoes which are outgrown every few months cost an arm and a leg. We help.

Hilltop beauty with a historical twist

SEE IT HERE
HAIM SHAPIRO

THINK what you like about the Crusaders, but you have to admit that they had a fine eye for location.

A case in point is Belvoir, the castle known in Hebrew as Kichav Hayarden (star of the Jordan), perched on the edge of a hilltop, with a magnificent view of the Jordan River and the mountains beyond.

The Crusaders, of course, picked the spot for its strategic value, with a commanding view of the road below in the Jordan valley, as well as the mountain passes to the East. However, despite these factors, Saladin captured the fortress in 1189.

But the location does mean that the only access to Belvoir is by a winding, narrow road which turns off the Beit She'an-Tzema junction opposite Kibbutz Neveh Ur. The area has long been a backwater; now, the peace treaty with Jordan will place it on a tourist route, which should be increasingly traveled in the months and years to come.

The Belvoir fortress is remarkably well-preserved. The dry moat looks almost intact. Inside you'll find that although some of the ground floor has been restored, there are underground tunnels, stairways and passages that have hardly changed in 900 years.

THESE days, there is another reason to visit Belvoir - a large sculpture garden with the works of Tel Aviv artist Yigal Tumarkin. All are monumental in scale, and it is probably only in a dramatic setting such as this that they can be fully appreciated.

According to Ofer Grinstein,

A sculpture garden consisting of works by Yigal Tumarkin provides a contrast to the Belvoir fortress. (Grinstein/Israel Sun) spokesman for the National Parks Authority, of which Belvoir is a part, the project elicited considerable response, far from all of it positive. But the Authority wanted public debate, he says. The question of whether to use historic sites as a background for contemporary art is still an open one, he adds.

Meanwhile, on the slope behind the fortress there is a far less ambitious project. The Authority has set out a series of topographical picture-maps identifying landmarks that are part of the panoramic view or just beyond it. Lesser-known sites are also identified, such as the Jordanian towns and villages just visible to the naked eye.

If one wanted to carp, one could, as did a member of our party, pointing out that, while the course of the Jordan is clear where the river is actually visible from the lookout point, the unseen river is marked only by a barely discernible dotted line. I was far more concerned about the beautifully executed enamel signs, easy prey for those sick souls who are not happy until they have defaced something along their way. If you have a chance, go to see the signs now, while you have the chance.

Naturally, a visit to this part of the country at this time of year will reward the visitor with a fabulous spectacle of wildflowers. Unfortunately, one of the nicest ways to see these is barely passable for vehicles - the old British Mandatory road that runs from Belvoir to moshavim Moleket and Ramat Zvi and the village of Taiba.

If it has rained a few days before you go, you may find it rough going even in a four-wheel-drive vehicle along this route.

Kayaking offers unspoiled firsthand view of Cape Cod

STEVE SILK

THE real back roads in this part of the Cape aren't roads. They're rivers.

The watery arteries of the Pamet and the Herring lead directly to the still-wild heart of this much-trampled vacationland.

And there's no better way to explore those winding streams than aboard a sea kayak.

On one of these sleek and silent craft, you can slip beneath the oaks and red maples, past the pitch pines, rugosa roses and beach plum just as quietly as one of the kingfishers working the river.

You can watch painted turtles splash as they drop off sun-warmed logs, listen to the summery sounds of red-winged blackbirds or spy on circling hawks.

Let your gaze drift toward the horizon, where weather-beaten houses crest rolling moors and the whoosh of the far-off surf sounds like a roaring wind.

Sometimes, when the pogies are running, you might feel them drum against the hull of your boat as they surge upriver riding a tiny wave of their own making.

Running rivers is just the start of what you can do in a sea kayak on the Cape. There are kettle ponds to explore, waves to surf, bays to cruise and, for the intrepid and skillful, there's the three-kilometer paddle from Chatham out to the Monomoy Islands, where you can share the sea with harbor seals and gray seals.

Sea kayaking may also have a certain cachet among the local literary set - sometime Cape resident and globe-trotting writer Paul Theroux has been paddling around the Cape and out to the islands for years.

His stories in travel magazines may have helped to popularize the sport. Theroux's most recent travel book - The Happy Isles of Oceania - took him paddling through the islands of the South Pacific.

Don't be deterred by chilly images of Eskimos paddling among ice floes, of sealskin-suited Nanooks slinging harpoons, or even of a hard-charging, closer-to-home paddler sealed into an six-meter splinter of an easily flipped boat.

The sport of sea kayaking need only be as difficult - or as easy - as you choose. A first-timer can settle into an open-cockpit kayak as easily as onto a Barcelona lounge.

It's something like sitting atop a big surfboard, albeit one with a keel, to make tracking (traveling in a straight line) easier.

Professional paddler Eric Gustafson maneuvers through the Pamet River. (Tony Bacewicz)

Sea kayaks are also typically longer and sleeker than those used in rivers. Traditionally, they are used in open water.

The boats are tippy - no worse than a canoe - but maneuverable.

An open cockpit cuts the novice's fear factor greatly - you aren't connected to your kayak with a spray skirt, so if the craft flips, you simply slide off the boat and into the water. (In kayaking, a spray skirt is the snug neoprene skirt worn around the paddler's waist and fitted onto the kayak's cockpit.)

Paddling a sea kayak is a breeze. Eric Gustafson, a kayaking guide who works the Outer Cape, has taken his 30-year-old grandmother out paddling. And he has taken kids as young as eight.

More regularly, Gustafson, a ski patroller at Mount Snow in Vermont in winter and instructor of surfing and windsurfing in summer, can be seen leading small groups of novice kayakers through the rivers, bays and waves of the Cape.

His aptly named business, Fun-seekers Ltd., introduces many a first-timer to the singular joys of paddle travel.

One of the most popular runs is the Pamet River, a mostly freshwater stream flowing haphazardly across the Outer Cape from just inside the dunes at Ballston Beach to Pamet Harbor and Cape Cod Bay.

On the map, the Pamet looks like a series of squiggly, skinny lines interrupted by chubby ellipses. With its many twisting turns, dead ends and interlinked channels, the river invites exploration.

One of Gustafson's typical two-hour paddles on the Pamet leads through a changing landscape of hillsides, moors and freshwater marsh.

On the river, Gustafson says paddlers usually fall into one of two camps.

Some are racers, with wind-milling paddles that propel them upstream and down with scenery-blurring speed.

Others are more content to go with the flow, with one eye on the river and the other trained on the abundant flora and fauna.

They know there's no reason to hurry. After all, it's only a back road. (The Hartford Courant)

Join a seder in the Arctic

WITH many Israelis beginning to think about Pessah excursions, Geographical Tours, in conjunction with Visa, is offering a 15-day excursion to Baffin Island in northern Canada, with part of the accommodation in igloos and a seder in the Arctic Ocean. The company also has an eight-day tour of Lapland, including transport on snowmobiles and dogsleds, for $2,690, including flights.

ISSTA reports that because Pessah is at the same time as Easter this year, prices abroad are likely to be high. The company is offering Pessah charters for students and young people for $349 to London and $359 to Paris. Natour's offerings for the holiday include an 18-night tour of Singapore and Indonesia, including Bali, for $3,900, as well as seven-night tour of Mexico for $2,180. For those who want to stay closer to home, the company has a 15-night tour of France for $1,964. All prices include flights.

BEFORE THE Pessah holiday, many local resorts have special deals. Kibbutz Afik in the southern Golan Heights is offering a three-day package which includes three entries to Hamat Gader, and full board for NIS 330. For groups of between seven and 14 participants, the kibbutz has a four-hour cowboy program, which includes a lesson in cowboy riding, a chance to participate in the roundup, a jeep tour and a cowboy dinner. The price is NIS 350 per person.

Special winter rates are available from several of the tourist facilities in Western Galilee. At Beit Hava in Shavei Zion, a night with breakfast for a couple is NIS 225 (NIS 250 on weekends); the nightly rate for a couple at Kibbutz Lotan is NIS 150, at Kibbutz Yehiam, NIS 144, and at the Achziv Resort Club, NIS 140.

Tips for the kayaker

SEA kayakers - novice or advanced - can find a wealth of opportunities on Massachusetts' Cape Cod. Many shops specializing in outdoor sports equipment rent kayaks; inquire locally. Be sure to get a flotation cushion or, if you're venturing into open water, a life jacket with your rental.

Before you set out to sea, be sure you are dressed appropriately. A T-shirt may be fine at the start, but if the wind kicks up, a cold front blows through or the sun sinks behind the clouds, you may want something warmer.

Cotton clothing will not keep you warm if it gets wet. Take along a pullover of wool or of a synthetic fabric designed to whisk moisture away from the surface of your skin.

Also bring sunscreen and water, juice or soda. Keep a change of clothing in your car or the vehicle that picks you up after the trip.

Eric Gustafson leads a variety of kayak trips on the Outer Cape. Most are suitable for beginners, although some experience in a canoe is helpful. For more information, write Funseekers Ltd., P.O. Box 1143, Wellfleet, Mass. 02667, or call (508) 349-1429.

A more traditional approach to sea kayaking - using sit-in rather than sit-on boats, is offered by H2Outfitters in West Yarmouth. Most of its trips operate out of Goose Hummock, a sporting-goods shop in Orleans. For more information, call H2Outfitters 15 Alden Road, West Yarmouth, Mass. 02673, or call (508) 775-4642.

Prognosis bad for heart of the city

Poor planning has clogged Jerusalem's arteries, leaving it with a weakened heart, Bill Hutman reports

URI Ben-Asher, Jerusalem's new chief city planner, raised eyebrows when he challenged a policy long considered too holy to criticize publicly.

But he was praised for speaking frankly about an issue that has tugged at the nation's conscience since the city's reunification in 1967: whether Jerusalem was being built up in the proper fashion.

The consensus at City Hall was that Ben-Asher was right in lashing out at policies being put ahead of planning considerations in the capital.

Planning for Jerusalem is done by government offices to serve political ends, and not with an eye to urban factors," Ben-Asher told the city's building and planning committee.

"Such planning is unhealthy for the city," said Ben-Asher, who began working in the post in December, putting him in charge of all aspects of urban planning in the capital.

The former Interior Ministry planner, who headed the Jerusalem District Planning Committee was speaking at the committee hearing on the controversial plan to build a Jewish neighborhood at Har Homa in southern Jerusalem.

His remarks were clearly a swipe at the plan, which as expected passed the committee easily by a vote of 7-1. But he went further, questioning Israel's development policy for Jerusalem since 1967.

In particular, he lashed out at the long-held government policy of pushing for construction of large Jewish neighborhoods around central Jerusalem, for demographic and strategic reasons.

The new neighborhoods were built with an eye to their quick population, often before the proper infrastructure and public services were built to make them livable, Ben-Asher told the councilors.

A report issued by the city this week reviewed that quick development: In 1970, Jerusalem was 108,000 dunams and had a population of about 290,000. Today, the city covers 123,000 dunams — following the 1992 annexation of 15,000 dunams just west of the city and part of Ramat Rahel, a kibbutz wedged between the southern neighborhoods of East Talpuz and Talpuz — and has nearly doubled its population.

Ben-Asher closed his presentation to the committee with the metaphor that seemed to sum up his view of this fast development: "The city of Jerusalem looks like a man with clogged arteries, all fat on the outside and a weak heart in the middle."

He clearly caught the councilors' attention. Afterwards, both opposition and coalition members said they were pleasantly surprised by Ben-Asher's willingness to speak his mind, especially so soon after taking his post.

The new neighborhood of Shuafat Ridge is a recent example of the kind of planning criticized by Uri Ben-Asher. (Flash 90)

A few days later, the councilors received an excellent example of what Ben-Asher was talking about.

Indeed, Ben-Asher, together with planning committee chairman Deputy Mayor Uri Lupiansky, at the subsequent committee meeting took a step that, using Ben-Asher's own metaphor, seemed to only add extra pounds to obese Jerusalem.

On Monday, the two presented an emergency measure before the planning committee, aimed at allowing the population of Jerusalem's newest neighborhood, Shuafat Ridge, before proper public institutions are built there.

The building code forbids families to move into new neighborhoods without kindergartens, schools and synagogues, and the measure that passed on Monday was aimed at getting around the regulation.

Families would be allowed to enter their apartments, and the city would provide mobile homes to temporarily house the public institutions pending completion of the permanent buildings, the committee agreed.

If there were any doubts that the experience at Shuafat Ridge would be different from that of any other large new Jewish neighborhood built on the outer rim of eastern Jerusalem since 1967, Monday's decision crushed them.

Ben-Asher declined to be interviewed this week. A city spokesman said Ben-Asher thought it improper to explain his views in the media before he presented them to the mayor and city council.

Ben-Asher's predecessor as chief engineer, Eliahu Barzachi, says Shuafat Ridge provides a case study of the role politics play in planning Jerusalem.

The land was originally expropriated from Arab residents of the nearby neighborhood of Shuafat for public use, according to Barzachi.

Former mayor Teddy Kollek wanted to build a soccer stadium there. But haredi leaders were against the move, on grounds games there on Shabbat would disturb area haredi neighborhoods.

The municipality gave in to the haredi pressure and the stadium was built in the southern neighborhood of Ma'ala. The expropriated land was rezoned for a Jewish neighborhood.

Why Jewish and not Arab? Barzachi says the answer is easy: Politics. Ramot, Pisgat Ze'ev, Neveh Ya'akov were all built with the same idea in mind — to create a belt of Jewish development around eastern Jerusalem.

Shuafat Ridge will close off the possibility for development of the Arab neighborhood of Shuafat to the west. To the east, Pisgat Ze'ev has already prevented the expansion of Arab neighborhoods.

It's no secret, Barzachi explains, that the government has tried to enforce a strict limit on Arab development in Jerusalem while pushing Jewish population growth.

However, it would be wrong to see the Arab-Israeli conflict as the only influence on planning in the city, she adds. "When I talk about politics, I'm talking about more than Jews and Arabs."

"There are also social and economic factors, which fall under the term 'political,' which have played a major role in the development of Jerusalem, as in the rest of the country," Barzachi says.

Israel has been a country of great immigration, and homes had to be built fast and inexpensively for many of those newcomers, notes Barzachi, who today is the deputy director of Tel Aviv University's school of architecture.

The city also had to meet the needs of its fast-growing haredi population, which brings us back to Shuafat Ridge, which is on its way to becoming the city's newest haredi neighborhood.

Several hundred haredi families will begin moving into homes there in the coming months, with a total of 2,100 units in advanced stages of construction.

Barzachi says there was no room to build large neighborhoods except on the capital's outskirts, in places like Shuafat Ridge.

It was natural, she says, for planners to look to undeveloped lands newly annexed to the city to build new neighborhoods.

It was not natural, however, to build only for Jews. "That was one of our biggest mistakes," she says.

As to the lack of kindergartens, schools and synagogues at Shuafat Ridge, Barzachi says that last year she wanted to hold up construction until plans for public institutions were ready.

City leaders, however, listened to the louder and increasingly influential voice of the haredi public. Haredi families wanted the homes on which, in many cases, they had already put down much money for, and would not accept delays.

Barzachi was forced out of her post immediately following the decision to move ahead with construction of Shuafat Ridge.

"Politics is not a dirty word," she says. "It is simply a reflection of the various needs of a society." Her successor now has the chance to show how he handles those needs.

Two dynasties merge into one with huge celebration

Everybody was there to see the Bobover and Vishnitzer rebbes. Herb Keinon reports on the hassidic wedding of the year

HAD visitors from abroad taken a wrong turn out of Tel Aviv Tuesday night and ended up on Bnei Brak's Shalom Square, they might have felt that they had stumbled into a different world.

They would have seen some 20,000 people standing in pouring rain and gazing at an elevated platform that looked like a huge boxing ring. In the middle, underneath a green velvet canopy dripping with rain, a woman whose face was completely hidden behind a white veil walked seven times around a furiously swaying young man in black coat and white scarf. An a cappella choir sang soulfully sweet, wordless melodies.

The occasion was the wedding of Ben Zion Meisles, grandson of the Bobover rebbe, and Haiya Ernest, granddaughter of the Vishnitzer rebbe. It was a union of two of the largest hassidic dynasties.

"Baruch haba," the master of ceremonies called out in heavily Polish-accented Hebrew. The crowd, which had begun gathering in the square at 6 p.m., fell silent as the Bobover rebbe, who came to the wedding from the U.S., and the Vishnitzer rebbe, who lives in Bnei Brak, made their way to the platform. With the crowd silent, the dominant sound was that of the wind rustling through the thousands of plastic bags worn to protect fur-trimmed streimels from the rain.

The masses who filled the streets, the men holding torches on the platform, the moon cutting in and out of quickly racing clouds, the oy-yo-yo niggun of the choir, all created a reality that seemed of another place, of another time.

"The mitzvah is to have the huppa under the sky, regardless of the weather," explained one Bobover hassid who acted as my unofficial guide. "The rain doesn't make a difference."

It really didn't. Although the wind was cold, and rain fell periodically, the crowd waited patiently. When it rained, the drops ricocheted off hundreds of black umbrellas that automatically went up and formed a vinyl roof, stretching across the width of the street and the length of the crowd. The bodies, tightly packed against each other (men completely separated from the women), created a windbreak.

A FEW who had binoculars tried to catch a glimpse of what was going on under the drenched huppa. Others strained for a view by pushing their glasses further up the bridges of their noses and squinting. But from where most people were standing, very little could be seen of the ceremony.

But seeing was not important; being there was what mattered.

"The main thing is just to be here," said my Bobover guide. "The main thing is to be in the presence of the rabbis, of the righteous people. And in their presence, you are in the presence of their righteous ancestors as well."

This man's son stood about hip-high, and was squashed in between walls of legs, thighs and waists. All he could see was the black garb of those standing in front of him, and — when he looked up — a small part of the black sky as it appeared through the moving clouds. The boy passed the time by identifying the voices of the rabbis who recited the blessings beneath the canopy.

The shattering of the glass under the groom's shoe at the end of the ceremony was not heard. Instead, what was heard was the wedding party's shout of "mazel tov, mazel tov." The cry was taken up by the crowd. The wordless, slow melodies of the choir were abruptly replaced by the upbeat sound of songs wishing the couple well.

In unison, thousands of people turned around and streamed down the street toward buses that would take them to the Tel Aviv Fairgrounds for the wedding meal. A few groups linked arms and danced to the music down the wet, glistening street, their umbrellas bobbing.

Guests were met at the fairground by multicolored banners with verses from Psalms that read, "The righteous will flourish like the palm tree; they will grow like a cedar in Lebanon."

Four halls were set up, two for the men and two for the women. In the main hall, a head table was set up for about 100 leading haredi rabbis. The groom was flanked by the Bobover and Vishnitzer rebbes, and sat immediately under a huge crown that was suspended from the ceiling.

Before him was a sea of tables,

Wedding guests marvel at two special super-sized hallot.

(Hanan Guttman)

and — at the back of the hall — rows of bleachers packed with clean-faced yeshiva students who stood for hours pushing, swaying and singing.

Waiters served schnitzel, rice and carrots on plastic plates, wrapped in aluminum foil. They wore green sashes on the sleeves of their black jackets and pulled plate after plastic plate from what seemed like an endless supply of Kinley soft-drink cartons.

Everybody seemed to be pushing everybody else. People pushed to get inside the hall, and ran up against those pushing to get out. They pushed to get to the tables, and then again to get away from the tables. They pushed to get to the bleachers and pushed to get off the bleachers. Ruddy-cheeked students pushed, as did graybeards. It was a claustrophobic's nightmare.

"People want to see the rabbis, watch how they interact," said Bobover hassid Haim Davidovitch. "They want to feel their presence."

"Feeling their presence" explained why the main hall was packed, while a second hall for the men, where a floor-to-ceiling television screen broadcast what was happening in the other hall, was only a quarter full. There the hassidim could see close-up shots of the rabbis, but could not feel their presence.

"I'm used to the pushing. It doesn't bother me," said one Vishnitzer hassid pressed up against a side wall in the main hall. "The sages say that he who is pushed trying to catch a glimpse of the righteous merits a reward in the world to come."

Vote delayed on ICL sale

Knesset panel concerned Eisenberg will gain too much power

EVELYN GORDON

THE Knesset Finance Committee yesterday deferred a vote on the sale of Israel Chemicals to Shaul Eisenberg, due to concern it would give Eisenberg control over too large a slice of the economy.

The committee will discuss the issue again on Monday, and is slated to vote then as well.

Another threat to the sale came from the employees' objections. Two coalition MKs said they would vote against the deal if the workers' interests are not protected, and these two, together with the opposition, could prevent approval.

Finance Minister Avraham Shohat and Industry and Trade Minister Micha Harish, at the suggestion of committee chairman Gedalya Gal (Labor), plan to meet with workers and management this morning to try to iron out the differences.

The concern over the extent of Eisenberg's holdings was bipartisan, spearheaded by Gal and Dan Tichon (Likud). Through his Israel Corporation, Eisenberg already controls several large companies, including Israel Oil Refineries, Pryon, Spectronics, Cold Storage, and Israel Shipping and Lighterage. However, his bid of $230.3 million for a 24.9 percent stake in ICL was the best offer the government received.

Gal said after the meeting that the committee is faced with a dilemma.

"We don't want the buyers to concentrate too many companies in their own hands," he said in a press statement. "But if we toe this line, we won't find a buyer of the [necessary] magnitude."

Gal said that despite his doubts, he is inclined to approve the deal. It is not the end of the world if it is not approved, he said, since the tender will simply be reopened - but this entails a risk that the privatization of large government companies will grind to a halt.

Tichon and Ron Nahman (Likud), in contrast, vigorously opposed the sale. Nahman said the goal of privatization was to disperse economic power, not further concentrate it, and that ICL could not be sold to someone like Eisenberg, who already controls "half the country."

Tichon added that ICL is too important to be sold to Eisenberg, who, he claimed, had abandoned other companies such as Ata and Zim when the going got tough.

Avraham Poraz (Meretz) was one of the few MKs who strongly favored the sale.

"I'm for privatization, and [Eisenberg] made the best offer," he said. "There is no legal justification for not selling to the highest bidder, unless there is some reason to disqualify him - and the fact that he owns other companies is not a reason to disqualify him."

Meanwhile, after employee representatives besieged the committee yesterday, Yossi Vanunu and Shmuel Avital (Labor), both from the Negev (where most of ICL's plants are located), said they would not support the sale if the workers' concerns were not addressed. The workers want a guarantee, Vanunu said, that their collective agreement will be honored by the new owners, as a protection against being fired.

Vanunu said he and Avital had been promised that ICL's management would meet with the workers, that Shohat and Harish would try to arbitrate if no agreement was reached, and that if this also failed, the issue would be brought to the Finance Committee.

"But none of these things happened," he said. "They made a mockery of us."

Trade and the troika

COMMENT

NEIL COHEN

It was pure coincidence that the delegation from the European Union (known as the "troika") was visiting when the terrible monthly trade deficit figures were announced. But the two are certainly related.

The Foreign Ministry is trying hard to persuade the government to sign the new trade "agreement" it has "negotiated" with the EU. It is not often that we agree with the Trade and Industry Ministry or the Agriculture Ministry, but both are quite right in saying that we might just as well hang out a white flag as sign the agreement.

The Foreign Ministry, with its obsequious ghetto mentality, views the very fact that the Europeans are talking to us as a major achievement. Given that they run a $7.5 billion annual trade surplus with us it would be astonishing if they did not!

The Foreign Ministry, though, would, for example, have us pay a $30 million annual fee for membership in the EU research and development projects club without getting any say in how those projects were allocated.

Whether or not we would see a penny of return on our investment would be decided at the whim of Mr. Juppe and his pals - the same ones who sell arms to countries sworn to our destruction but maintain an embargo on selling arms to us.

The Foreign Ministry, hell-bent on creating its "new Middle East," says that its no matter that we're being raped, so long as he's from a good family and anyway, don't confuse me with details. That's one hell of a way to negotiate.

Agriculture Ministry strikes back

Most people probably could not believe their eyes or ears when confronted with the news that the Agriculture Ministry was destroying vegetables because it anticipated and oversupply in the next few months and wanted to stop prices from falling.

It was only a couple of months ago that tomatoes were selling for NIS 10 a kilo and vegetables were fueling a surge in inflation. Curiously, the Farmers Ministry was a lot less swift in organizing imports to try to curb the price-gougers.

And where was the good Lady Namir? Aren't there enough poor people in this country? If we can destroy vegetables we can certainly give them to the needy.

Harry Recanati to court: Sack brother from IDB

Petition demands IDB sell Discount Bank shares

EVELYN GORDON

IDB Bankholding should be forced to sell part or all of its 13% stake in Bank Discount, and chairman Rafael Recanati should be forced to resign, Recanati's brother Harry demanded of the High Court of Justice yesterday.

The request was an addition to a petition filed by Harry in September, which asked that a commission of inquiry be set up to determine why his brother is still running IDB, despite his criminal conviction in the bank shares trial last spring and the recommendations of the 1986 Bejski Commission.

The petition said such a commission should also investigate why the state, which acquired IDB after the 1983 bank shares collapse, sold it back to Recanati on preferential terms a couple of years ago.

In yesterday's request, attorney Michael Corinaldi noted that by law, anyone who buys more than 10% of a bank must receive a permit from the Bank of Israel. If the buyer fails to do this, the governor of the central bank has the right to force him to sell any shares in excess of 10%.

Harry Recanati charges that IDB bought its stake in Discount piecemeal - never purchasing more than 10% at one time - to avoid having to obtain a permit. However, Corinaldi said, last year's Supreme Court ruling on whether Discount needed a permit to buy 50% of what was then Barclay's Discount explicitly said "piecemeal purchases" do need a permit if the total bought exceeds 10%.

Therefore, he wrote, IDB was in violation of the law, and Bank of Israel Governor Jacob Frenkel should force it to sell its excess holdings.

With regard to Rafael Recanati's continued tenure as chairman of IDB, Corinaldi cited the Bejski report's recommendation: "Mr. Recanati is not fit to continue in his positions at Discount and IDB, or [to hold] any other position in the Israeli banking system, including branches both in Israel and abroad," the report stated.

Rafael Recanati. (Isaac Harari)

Therefore, Corinaldi said, the court should order Frenkel and Finance Minister Avraham Shohat to oust Recanati.

In a letter to Corinaldi submitted with the request, however, Treasury legal advisor Tamar Hecker said Frenkel lacks any legal authority to depose Recanati as chairman of IDB, because it is not a bank, and Frenkel's powers extend only to banks.

While it is true that the Bejski Commission recommended amending the law to extend the governor's authority to bank-holding companies, this was never done, she said - apparently, she added, because the government and the Knesset thought depositors' interests were adequately protected under the current law.

"It was not considered appropriate to amend the law just so that Rafael Recanati could be ousted from the chairmanship of IDB," she wrote.

There is also no need for a commission of inquiry, Hecker added, because all the issues raised in the petition have been thoroughly investigated by the state comptroller.

Trade deficit soars in January

JOSE ROSENFELD

THE trade deficit soared 59.5 percent last month to a record $1.1 billion, as exports slumped 6.8% and imports jumped 13%, the Central Bureau of Statistics reported yesterday.

Exports fell to $1.37b. from $1.47b. in December, while imports rose to $2.37b. from $2.1b.

Consumer imports increased 13.4% to $290m., from $245m. Seasonally adjusted figures, excluding ships, airplanes and diamonds, show a drop in exports of 14% in November, December, and January compared with the previous three months. By contrast, imports were 9% higher than in the preceding three months. During the past three months, the deficit expanded by $300m., due to a $150m. rise in imports and a similar drop in exports.

Industrial exports fell 14% compared with the previous three months. Electronics and machinery exports fell by a quarter, after jumping by 16% in the preceding three months. Mining and quarrying exports dropped 12%, while optics, precision machinery and jewelry exports fell 8%. Similarly, food and beverage exports decreased 5% and textile and clothing 4%. By contrast, plastic and rubber exports jumped 18%, while chemical exports rose a more moderate 5%.

Agricultural exports increased 4% this season to $234m.

Consumer imports averaged $264m. a month in the past three months, unchanged from the previous three months. Non-durable imports fell 7%, while imports of cars rose 4.5% and electric appliances 5%.

Production input imports, excluding diamonds and fuel, increased 9%, after growing 3.5% in August through October.

Fuel imports jumped 15% in the past three months.

Investment goods imports, such as machinery, equipment, and vehicles surged 14% in the past three months, with commercial vehicle imports shooting up 25%.

Rosen drops out of race for El Al chairman

HAIM SHAPIRO

TRANSPORT Minister Yisrael Kessar will have to find another candidate to head the board of El Al, after Yossi Rosen, the former director-general of Arkia, dropped out because of a conflict of interest.

Rosen is the head of Mishab, a subsidiary of Koor and Clal, both of which have voiced an interest in buying the airline once it is privatized.

Another candidate who dropped out yesterday was Michael Federman, who heads the Dan Hotel chain, which could conflict with the interests of El Al's subsidiary, the Laromne chain.

The board is due to take over next week, when the national airline officially emerges from 13 years of receivership.

Dollar should make up 85% of currency basket - Brodet

JOSE ROSENFELD

TREASURY director-general David Brodet yesterday called on the Bank of Israel to significantly increase the weight of the dollar in the currency basket to improve trade terms.

According to Brodet, the dollar should make up to 85 percent of the currency basket instead of 53%, currently. He noted that while the currency basket rose by about 6% last year, the dollar's value barely changed against the shekel.

Treasury spokesman Eli Yoseph explained that Brodet wants the currency basket's make-up to be re-evaluated to reflect the ratio of dollar-linked trade, since the weights assigned to the five currencies that make up the basket have not been changed since its creation 10 years ago.

Bank of Israel spokesman Ohad Bar-Efrat rejected Yoseph's explanation, saying that every year, the central bank reviews the volume of trade of the different currency blocks and adjusts the ratio of each currency in the basket accordingly.

Bank of Israel director of foreign currency Avi Ben-Bassat sharply criticized Brodet.

WORLD MARKET REPORTS
● The US T-bond market ended last week with a strong rally on a positive employment report, but has been unable to hold the gains in front of the Treasury re-financing. The benchmark 30yr T-bond yield has fallen by 10bps over the week. The market is focused on the January PPI data, released today after our deadline. The market expects a 0.4% increase. The growing confidence that interest rates have peaked led by Wednesday, and there is little to stimulate much interest. The narrow trading range is likely to continue.
● Wall Street tried to make an assault on its 3553.88 high, but failed. The DJIA is weighted towards cyclical firms which investment attention is beginning to turn to more defensive counters, and thus this index should under-perform the broader market.
● The UK gilts performed well after weakness brought about by the problems faced by the Conservative Party, which the market thought could threaten an early General Election. The March long gilt future broke through 102-00 to be turned back by resistance at 102-25. A correction to 102-15 may be expected.
● The UK FT-SE 100 index has broken through the 3050 - 3060 area to higher levels. UK equities are fundamentally attractive raised against a background of a gentle decline in real long gilt yields expected this year. Cookson (CKSN.L) are particularly attractive at current levels, and the shares are finding good buying support.
● The Asia-Pacific markets rallied powerfully, sentiment having been turned by the apparent resolution of the Mexican crisis, the belief that US T-bond yields may have peaked, and the strong rally on Wall Street. The Sino-American trade dispute did not have much impact on the Hong Kong market, partly because market participants have grown cynical about such quarrels, and partly because an influential US strategist was reported to be about to raise his recommended weighting in Hong Kong. The impulsive rallies in these markets have carried through areas of resistance, and while corrections may be expected, important lows are in place. In Malaysia, our clients are looking to buy Sime Darby (SIME.ML) on any market pullback, and in Singapore, our buyers are back for DBS Bank (DBS.SI).
● Gold bullion is holding around US$375/oz. If this gives way, bargain-hunting and short-covering should hold the price above $372.50/oz, and there is enough physical demand from SE Asia to underpin the level. Producer selling was reported at the $378 - $379 level.

drawal should be over a four period.

Earlier this week, Rabin indicated to the Labor Party Knesset faction that he does not think he is violating his 1992 campaign promise not to "go down" from the Golan, as long as there is some Israeli presence "on the ridge." (Story, Page 2)

In a Washington speech last week, Housing Minister Binjamin Ben-Eliezer said Israel would insist on retaining its early-warning station on Mt. Hermon, but would not object to Syria building its own early warning station there as well.

Ben-Eliezer said Israel could not rely on the US to man the early-warning station in Israel's place and relay the intelligence data.

In a briefing for reporters earlier this week, a very senior Israeli official cited Assad as saying that if Israeli retention of early-warning stations were a prerequisite for an Israeli-Syrian deal, Assad would prefer the status quo.

Arafat also told Rabin about the "state security" courts which he had decreed Tuesday to ensure speedy trials for terrorists.

Rabin was not impressed. "We would like to see not only declarations, but implementation. We would like to see a reduction in terror against us."

The tenor of Rabin's remarks to Arafat were: disarm, forestall, arrest, and convict terrorists.

Speaking later at a press conference in Arafat's office, French Foreign Minister Alain Juppe, heading a European Union delegation, justified the closure only as a short-term security measure, and warned of "catastrophe to the region" if Israeli-Palestinian talks fail.

Arafat answered a question about his feelings toward future talks with Israel with: "I am a pragmatist, not a dreamer."

This was later interpreted by his spokesman Marwan Kanafeh to mean the talks would continue. However, he thought Rabin is underestimating Arafat's determination to move ahead with the

LEVINE

The report contends the circumstances of Hamad's death were concealed from his family.

Levine denied telling Alon that Hamad was killed during "kill verification." He also denied ever saying that he was killed by friendly fire and stressed that he never said that the truth should be withheld from the family.

He also said his remarks on the Druse religion had been taken out of context, and that he meant that they have certain sensitivities, "just like any other group."

"Hamad was fatally wounded in the head during an assault on terrorists," Levine said. He added that the possibility exists that after Hamad was killed, he was also hit by friendly fire.

Chief of General Staff Lt.-Gen. Amnon Shahak has ordered a thorough investigation of the matter, and said in a statement: "It is unacceptable that families of fallen soldiers are not being told the truth."

Druse MK Assad Assad (Likud), himself a colonel in the reserves, last night called on Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin to set up a state commission of inquiry.

On Wednesday representatives of the settlements demonstrated against construction of the fence, and temporarily blocked a tractor from working. The tractor returned to work yesterday.

According to Nissim's Gilber Maman, Rabin said the fence is not meant to mark a border, but to prevent smuggling.

Herb Keimon adds: Shortly after meeting with Arafat, Rabin met with the leaders of the three settlements in northern Gaza - Nissim, Eilat Sinal, and Dugit - to discuss their objections to the construction of an electrified fence on the Green Line, north of their settlements.

The poll of Palestinians also shows support for armed attacks against Israel at 46%, support for Arafat at 53%, and for his Fatah faction at 49.5%, while 55.3% expect that talks will lead to a Palestinian state.

The support for armed attacks is down from 56% in a similar poll taken three months ago. The poll was conducted February 2-4 among 1,089 respondents.

Support for Arafat increased from 44% in November and 49% in December. Support for Fatah reached an all-time high, while expectations of talks achieving statehood was up from 45% after the Oslo agreement in September 1993.

Despite these optimistic forecasts, 81% want talks to stop "while settlements continue to expand."

On Wednesday representatives of the settlements demonstrated against construction of the fence, and temporarily blocked a tractor from working. The tractor returned to work yesterday.

According to Nissim's Gilber Maman, Rabin said the fence is not meant to mark a border, but to prevent smuggling.

Herb Keimon adds: Shortly after meeting with Arafat, Rabin met with the leaders of the three settlements in northern Gaza - Nissim, Eilat Sinal, and Dugit - to discuss their objections to the construction of an electrified fence on the Green Line, north of their settlements.

The poll of Palestinians also shows support for armed attacks against Israel at 46%, support for Arafat at 53%, and for his Fatah faction at 49.5%, while 55.3% expect that talks will lead to a Palestinian state.

The support for armed attacks is down from 56% in a similar poll taken three months ago. The poll was conducted February 2-4 among 1,089 respondents.

Support for Arafat increased from 44% in November and 49% in December. Support for Fatah reached an all-time high, while expectations of talks achieving statehood was up from 45% after the Oslo agreement in September 1993.

Despite these optimistic forecasts, 81% want talks to stop "while settlements continue to expand."

According to Nissim's Gilber Maman, Rabin said the fence is not meant to mark a border, but to prevent smuggling.

BUCKING THE ODDS - The Knicks' Anthony Bonner tries to grab the ball away from a prone Eric Murdock during New York's surprising 95-87 loss to the Milwaukee Bucks Wednesday night at Madison Square Garden.

Hakeem ignites Rockets' victory over Kings

NEW YORK (AP) - Playing without their second-leading scorer didn't bother the Houston Rockets. That's because their No. 1 scorer, Hakeem Olajuwon, was at his best.

Olajuwon had 31 points and matched his season highs with 17 rebounds and eight blocks Wednesday night, leading the defending NBA champions to a 97-86 victory over the Kings at Sacramento.

It was Houston's first game since guard Vernon Maxwell was suspended for at least 10 games and fined $20,000 for punching a heckler during Monday's loss at Portland.

"It definitely was a big win, especially with the circumstances around it," said Kenny Smith, who scored 17 points on 7-for-8 shooting for Houston. "We seem to play well in certain circumstances."

Mario Elie, who replaced Maxwell in the Rockets' starting lineup, had 13 points and six assists. But Olajuwon, last year's league MVP, was the main Rocket booster.

"They are undisciplined a little bit, but they came up big," said Kings coach Garry St. Jean. "What can I say about Hakeem, except that he was terrific."

Mitch Richmond scored 28 points for Sacramento, which heads into the All-Star break with its first winning record (25-20) in 15 years.

Magic 110, Mavericks 92. Anfernee Hardaway scored 30 points and Shaquille O'Neal had 19 in three quarters as Orlando improved its home record to 23-1.

Orlando reached the All-Star break with a 37-10 record, best in the Eastern Conference. Dallas has lost 11 of its last 13 games. Jim Jackson and Jamal Mashburn, the NBA's highest scoring tandem, were held to a total of 19 before sitting out the fourth quarter.

Hornets 106, Pistons 78. Reserve Dell Curry scored 21 points as visiting Charlotte handed Detroit its worst loss of the season.

The Pistons were playing their third game in three days because of Tuesday's makeup game with Washington. Altonzo Mourning had 16 points and nine rebounds for the Hornets. Rafael Addison led Detroit with a career-high 25 points.

Celtics 75, Cavaliers 67. After scoring only 25 points in the first half, Boston came back to win the defensive duel.

Several records for low scoring were set in the game. The 67 points matched the fewest ever in a game by Cleveland, and both teams tied franchise marks for fewest points in a half. After Boston got only 25 in the first half, Cleveland scored only 27 in the second.

Heat 111, Bulls 107. Tim Lincecum tied a career high with 25 points and rookie Khalid Reeves hit a pair of 3-pointers in the final four minutes to help Miami beat visiting Washington.

Miami's Glen Rice scored 27 points. Rookie Juwan Howard scored a season-high 31 points for the Bulls, and Chris Webber added a season-high 26 points to go with 11 assists and eight rebounds.

Knicks 96, Pacers 77. Patrick Ewing had 24 points, a season-high 22 rebounds and five blocks as New York beat Indiana for the 12th time in their last 13 regular-season meetings.

John Starks also had 24 points, including five 3-pointers, for the visiting Knicks, who overcame an early 14-point deficit. Reggie Miller scored 22 points for Indiana, but was 7-of-17 from the field.

Hawks 111, Nets 88. Steve Smith scored a career-high 35 points, including five 3-pointers and 12-of-12 free throws, as Atlanta routed the short-handed New Jersey Nets.

The Nets played without leading scorers Derrick Coleman and Kenny Anderson, who are both injured. Armon Gilliam led the visiting Nets with 25 points and Chris Morris added 19.

Bucks 100, Timberwolves 93. Glenn Robinson scored 37 points, including 15-of-15 from the free-throw line, as Milwaukee won at home.

With the Bucks leading 81-80, Robinson and Minnesota's Doug West bumped into each other along the sideline as Minnesota brought the ball up the court. After both were whistled for taunting, Robinson sank the technical for the Bucks and Isiah Rider for the Timberwolves. Todd Day, who scored 19 points, then increased the Bucks' margin to 87-81 with a layup and a 3-pointer.

Suns 108, Jazz 104. Danny Ainge scored 19 points and made two key steals as Phoenix won for the ninth time in 11 games.

John Stockton hit a 3-pointer with 37 seconds left to cut Phoenix's lead to two and the Jazz got the ball back with a chance to tie or win. But Karl Malone missed a 3-pointer and A.C. Green was fouled after grabbing the rebound for the Suns. Green made both free throws for the final margin. Wesley Person scored 23 points for the Suns, while Malone had 30 points and 17 rebounds for Utah.

Blazers 116, Bulls 103. Clifford Robinson scored 28 points, including 22 in the second half, as Portland beat visiting Chicago.

Rod Strickland had 18 points and 10 assists for Portland. Scottie Pippen led the Bulls with 26 points, 10 rebounds and eight assists.

Lakers 115, Spurs 99. Anthony Peeler scored 14 of his 26 points in the fourth quarter as Los Angeles ended San Antonio's eight-game winning streak.

Vlade Divac had 25 points, 15 rebounds and eight assists for the Lakers, who won their third in a row without two-thirds of their starting frontcourt. Chuck Person led the Spurs with 24 points.

Spurs center David Robinson left the game with a mild sprain of his right ankle in the third quarter, and teammate Dennis Rodman was ejected in the fourth quarter after being called for a flagrant foul.

Maxwell suspended for 10 games, fined $20,000

NEW YORK (Reuters) - The National Basketball Association has come down hard on Vernon Maxwell, suspending the Houston Rockets guard for at least 10 games and fining him $20,000 for punching a fan in the face during a game at Portland Memorial Coliseum.

The fine matches the highest in league history, while the suspension is the second-longest in the NBA, surpassed only by the suspension given Los Angeles Lakers forward Kermit Washington in 1977 which lasted more than half the season.

NBA Vice President of Operations Rod Thorn, who announced the fine and suspension late on Wednesday, labeled the punishment "unparalleled" during his stay with the league.

Maxwell will sit out at least 10 games, at which time a hearing will be held to determine if he should be allowed to return to the Rockets.

His earliest return would be on February 28 at Dallas.

Steve George, a 35-year-old fan from Atlanta, said he was hit by Maxwell and would take legal action.

"Absolutely, I'm pressing charges," said George. "I was hit by an NBA player while sitting in row L, and I'm not happy."

The two fans told police they did not throw anything but admitted to yelling at Maxwell and using obscene gestures.

Witnesses said Maxwell and the fan exchanged verbal obscenities as the athlete was leaving the court at halftime.

Maxwell, who is known as "Mad Max" for his volatile behavior, was ejected, along with Horry and Rockets assistant coach Larry Smith, who also went into the stands to break up the fight.

Talks stalled, Congress still cool to baseball action

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Two leading Democrats yesterday urged Congress to act quickly to end the Major League Baseball strike but there was little support from other members of either party for intervention.

Meanwhile, negotiators for major league owners and players have left Washington after a week of futile bargaining with mediator Bill Uster and no new talks are scheduled with spring training camps due to open in a week.

Reps. David Bonior of Michigan and Pat Williams of Montana said at a news conference that the strike was hurting tens of thousands of workers at ball parks or nearby businesses.

"Every day this strike goes on, it doesn't just take bats out of the hands of players; it takes paychecks out of the hands of tens of thousands of working men and women who depend on baseball to put food on the table," Bonior said.

He said about 60,000 people worked at the 28 major league ballparks as ushers, vendors or in other jobs and as many as 150,000 workers were affected by the strike.

But House Democratic leader Richard Gephardt of Missouri expressed coolness to President Clinton's legislation introduced Wednesday that would require binding arbitration to end the strike.

A Senate hearing on ending or weakening baseball's antitrust exemption is scheduled next week.

House Speaker Newt Gingrich and Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, both Republicans, said Wednesday they did not think Congress should get involved in the dispute now but would not rule out action at a later date.

They urged further talks between striking players and team owners.

Spring training camps in Florida and Arizona are to open next week with replacement players and the two states are worried about large losses of revenue should fans who normally visit decide to stay home.

The regular season is due to start in April.

Strawberry pleads guilty to tax evasion

WHITE PLAINS, New York (Reuters) - Baseball slugger Darryl Strawberry pleaded guilty to one count of tax evasion in federal court yesterday and agreed to a three-month jail sentence.

Strawberry, suspended by Major League Baseball for 60 days and released by the San Francisco Giants Monday after twice testing positive for cocaine, was charged with failing to report approximately $344,000 in income from 1987-90. In his plea, Strawberry admitted that he earned hundreds of thousands of dollars in cash from autograph signing shows and personal appearances. Strawberry said he evaded payment of taxes by intentionally failing to report this income.

UEFA rewards England, Norway, Luxembourg for fair play

NYON, Switzerland (AP) - Italy, France, Germany and England have each been allotted four places in next season's UEFA Cup.

Italy, France and Germany earned the berths based on a points system that grades each country's club performances in various European competitions over the last five years.

England was awarded three berths based on the points system, but gained an extra spot because it was in the top three of UEFA's "fair play" ranking, which rewards "sportsmanlike conduct of players, officials and spectators."

Norway and Luxembourg were the other two countries that gained a "fair play" berth. The top three were determined in October, before the latest incidents of fan and spectator violence in England.

Belgium, Spain, Portugal and Russia each will have three places in the next season's UEFA Cup.

Countries can gain extra berths by sending teams to the re-launched Intertoto Cup this summer. The four semifinalists from that tournament, to be played in June and July, also earn UEFA Cup spots.

Wasim Akram destroys Zimbabwe, gives Pakistan Test win in 3 days

BULAWAYO, Zimbabwe (AP) - Pearsome bowling by Wasim Akram spelled disaster for Zimbabwe, giving Pakistan victory yesterday in the second cricket Test.

Pakistan then knocked off the 61 runs needed in the second innings to win by eight wickets with two days to spare in the five-day match at the Queens Sports Club.

Akram overall took eight wickets for 65, and in the process broke finger bones of two batsmen, Mark Dekker and David Houghton. Dekker will not be able to play in the final Test, which starts on Wednesday.

Zimbabwe were all out for 146 in their second innings, with only lower order batsman Stuart Carlisle offering any resistance, ending 46 not out.

Akram won the man of the match award.

Relations between the two sides have soured following repeated abuse and obscenities hurled at the Zimbabwe batsmen.

Akram was the worst culprit, with his comments easily audible off the field. He was given a severe reprimand by match referee Jackie Hendricks of West Indies but escaped a fine.

Nordiques' Ricci sinks Whalers, 3-2

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) - Mike Ricci broke a tie with the first of Quebec's two third-period, power-play goals and the Nordiques beat the Hartford Whalers 3-2 on Wednesday night.

With Paul Ranheim serving a penalty and the score tied 1-1, Ricci backhanded the rebound of Joe Sakic's shot from the left point past Sean Burke 8 minutes, 19 seconds into the third period.

Valeri Kamensky added another power-play goal for Quebec at 10:43, which ended up being the game-winner as Ranheim scored for Hartford with six minutes remaining.

Canadiens 4, Senators 2. At Ottawa, Brian Bellows continued his scoring streak with two goals for Montreal. The veteran left-winger, scoreless through Montreal's first six games, now has five goals in his last three starts.

Kirk Muller and Brian Fogarty also scored as Montreal recorded its first road win of the season and improved to 4-3-2 overall.

Rangers 5, Capitals 4. At New York, the Rangers won a battle of special teams as Brian Leetch scored a power-play goal with 4:19 left to beat Washington.

Leetch's game-winner, his first goal of the season, capped a Rangers rally that saw them come back twice from two-goal deficits and a one-goal deficit in the third.

Maple Leafs 3, Stars 3. At Toronto, Mats Sundin flipped the puck over sprawling goalie Andy Moog with 1:6 seconds left in regulation time

Local baseball, softball get int'l boost

(softball) and Sam Pelter (baseball) attended the organizations' annual congresses. Litz said that Israel will send its national team to the European Men's Championships in Denmark in July. Nine teams have already entered the tournament.

Pelter registered Israel to participate in European Championships in three separate age groups this summer, ages 10-12 in Italy, 13-15 in the Czech Republic and 16-18 in Austria. By participating in federation events for the first time, Israel will be able to combine national teams from all regions instead of being limited to regional championships as it was in Little League tournaments.

The local baseball and softball seasons begin in March and both organizations welcome new players, coaches and umpires.

squad, former captains Graham Gooch, 41, and Mike Gatting, 37, both announced their retirement from international cricket during the tour.

"From my point of view it has been very disappointing," Gooch said. "I went out there to try to do well and I didn't achieve the standard that I am used to."

It won't get any easier for England. This summer, the West Indies team arrives for a six-Test tour.

Fletcher did agree with Atherton that England needs to turn to younger players for the future.

"With the 'A' team doing well in India there are some good young players starting to develop," Fletcher said. "I don't know if there will be a great number of changes. It would be stupid to do a lot of drastic things. But we're going to sit down over the coming months and sort things out."

courage me," Fletcher said. "There are people who have done well. (Graham) Thorpe's done well. (Graeme) Hick's done well and (Darren) Gough picked up 20 wickets in three Test matches."

Fletcher rebuffed Atherton's parting shot before leaving Australia that the England team was not "as united and focused as last year."

"There was no disunity as far as I was concerned," Fletcher

No cheers for England on return from disastrous Ashes tour

LONDON (AP) - There were no cheering crowds at the airport to welcome England's cricket team home. Following four months of humiliation in Australia, even a smile was hard to find.

"We are all very disappointed because we went to Australia with the intention of bringing the Ashes back home," captain Mike Atherton said after the plane touched down at Heathrow.

England never came close to reclaiming the Ashes, a trophy it lost in 1987. It lost the five-Test series 3-1 to Australia, with one draw. All three losses, by any standard, were by huge margins and Australia simply outclassed England in every facet of the game.

England manager Keith Fletcher denied his job was under threat because of the poor results, and instead searched to find whatever bright spots he could think of.

Lackluster Maccabi Tel Aviv outlasts Ljubljana, 86-79, setting up CSKA showdown

JOEL GORDIN

MACCABI Tel Aviv, hopeless on the rebounds and turning the ball over nine times in the first half, muddled through to beat Olimpija Ljubljana 86-79 in the Slovenian capital last night.

With the victory, Maccabi boosted its record to 7-5 and kept pace with CSKA Moscow, 92-75 winners over hosts Scavolini Pesaro on Wednesday night.

The scene is now set for a showdown on Thursday in Russia against CSKA for the fourth and final quarter-final spot from group A.

Maccabi started well last night, two early three-pointers from Doron Jamchee bounding the Israelis into a 18-14 lead. Then Maccabi turned the ball over five times in a row and the Slovenians took advantage to come back to a 23-21 lead.

Maccabi also showed the shape of things to come by losing vital defensive rebounds and giving their opponents second and even third attempts at the net. Maccabi also had problems defending Ljubljana's American, big Antony Reed, who at one stage hit six in a row. However, before the break Morris Coleman found his shooting hand and also sank six in succession to keep the visitors in the game.

Just before the half-time buzzer, with the score tied at 45-45, Jamchee hit his third three-pointer and the Maccabeans went to the locker room a satisfactory 48-45 ahead, considering they had turned the ball over nine times to Ljubljana's once.

The entire second half was marked by the inability of Maccabi players to pull down the rebounds under their own baskets, thus giving the Slovenians repeated opportunities to make up for shooting mistakes. Luckily, Ljubljana's front line wasn't very good.

Against a more formidable squad - CSKA - for starters - Maccabi would have paid dearly for the apathy under the boards. At any rate, some good opportunistic work by Nadav Henefeld and solid shooting by Coleman and Curic kept Maccabi in the picture until the last minute, when the Israelis led 79-77.

Coleman hit the front end of a one-and-one to make it 80-77. Motti Daniel fouled Marko Milic and he was on target with both ends of his shots, making it 80-79. With the crowd on its feet, the Maccabi players worked out a coordinated attack and Jam-chee banged in a vital two points to up the lead to 82-79.

In desperation, the Slovenians sent Jamchee to the foul line and he made it 84-79. In the last second, Coleman dunked in the clincher to make it 86-79.

Maccabi showed fighting spirit at the end, and kept cool under pressure. Nevertheless, they did not impress against a lackluster team and if they want to win in Moscow, they'll need to polish up on the rebounds - and practice catching the ball.

Coleman was top scorer with 20, while Jamchee had 17 (four three-pointers), Curic 17, and Henefeld 17. The latter was the top rebounder (14) and did sterling defensive work on Roman Horvac, forcing him to foul out with only 10 points. Ljubljana deserves credit for its fighting performance, even though it has no chance to make the next round.

Reed was the top scorer, and scored on some dunks which would have done credit to Michael Jordan. Young Boris Corenc was hot in the first half, but faded later. Vitaly Nassov and Dusan Hauptman missed many chances to capitalize on Maccabi's lack of fire under the boards.

Mac. TA, Haifa set for Match of Season

ORI LEWIS

MACCABI Haifa travel to the National Stadium in Ramat Gan tomorrow evening for the main match of the 18th round of National League in a match which could go a long way towards determining the outcome of the championship.

The clash, between Israel's two top club sides over the past several seasons, should prove to be another thrilling contest, with Haifa, five points adrift of leaders Tel Aviv, desperately needing to win - or at least to deny the Tel Avivians the luxury of winning in order to stay in touch.

If things go according to last season's form, then the crowd that turns out to watch the televised match at 6 p.m. will be in for a high-class contest that will have all that's good in Israeli soccer, and probably some of what is bad.

The first meeting between the two sides this season ended in a goalless draw.

In the 93-94 season, two matches were drawn 1-1 and Haifa won the other contest 5-0. But there were also five sendings-off, and the horrendous injury sustained by Haifa defender Roman Petz. He suffered a broken leg that put him out of action until well into the current season.

Petz is out injured for Haifa in tomorrow's clash, as is Moshe Glan, who is serving a one-match suspension. Tel Aviv will be missing Eli Driks, who is also suspended.

In other matches of interest this weekend, second-placed Hapoel Petah Tikva face Maccabi Petah Tikva in a local derby. Hapoel are just two points behind Maccabi Tel Aviv.

Betar Jerusalem, hoping to right their ship after the 4-2 drubbing by Bnei Yehuda last week, will be wanting to take out their aggressions on Ironi Rishon, and Hapoel Haifa, under the guidance of new coach Viko Hadad will also want to put the past behind them and start their new era with a win over visiting Bnei Yehuda.

This weekend's National League action (all matches tomorrow, kickoff 15:00 unless stated, first-round results in brackets):

Betar Tel Aviv v Ironi Ashdod, National Stadium (1-0); Hapoel Beersheva v Maccabi Netanya, Beersheva (2-3); Maccabi Tel Aviv v Maccabi Haifa, National Stadium (0-0); Hapoel Maccabi Petah Tikva v Hapoel Petah Tikva, Petah Tikva (0-2); Maccabi Herzliya v Zahirim Holon, Herzliya (0-2); Hapoel Beit She'an v Hapoel Tel Aviv, Beit She'an (1-1); Hapoel Haifa v Bnei Yehuda, Kiryat Eliezer (1-2); Betar Jerusalem v Zahirim Holon, Teddy Stadium (0-1).

Nineteen fans charged in riot at Chelsea

LONDON (AP) - Fan violence is haunting English soccer once again.

Nineteen fans were charged yesterday in connection with a rampage following the FA Cup game between London rivals Chelsea and Millwall.

Eleven police officers were injured in the melee Wednesday night at Chelsea's Stamford Bridge ground.

"I hope we are not going back to the hooligan-dominated days of a decade or so ago," Football Association chief executive Graham Kelly said.

The trouble broke out immediately following the game, which ended with First Division club Millwall eliminating the Premier League team 5-4 in a penalty shootout.

A large number of fans invaded the field, with Chelsea and Millwall supporters fighting each other. Two dozen mounted police, as well as officers with riot sticks, massed across the field to keep the fans apart.

Millwall's Australian striker, Dave Mitchell, was pushed to the ground and spat on by one of the invading Chelsea fans.

Caught in the middle of the action was Millwall's American goalkeeper Kasey Keller, who sealed the victory with a diving save on the last penalty by Chelsea's John Spencer.

Further clashes between fans and police continued outside the stadium. Several cars parked in the area were damaged.

Thirty-eight fans were rounded up. Of those, 13

Chelsea fans and six Millwall supporters were charged with various public order offenses. They were released on bail and ordered to appear in court next month.

Scotland Yard said one police officer required hospital treatment for neck injuries and another needed four stitches for a head wound. Nine other officers suffered minor injuries, including cuts and sprains.

The FA launched an investigation into the incidents. Chelsea officials urged fans to identify those responsible for the violence and said anyone caught will be banned from Stamford Bridge.

Fences at English football grounds were ripped down after the 1989 Hillsborough tragedy in which nearly 100 fans were crushed to death at the Sheffield stadium.

5 athletes suspended for doping
MONACO (Reuters) - Five athletes, including American discus thrower Michael Gravelle and heptathlete Gea Johnson, have been suspended after positive drugs tests, the International Amateur Athletic Federation (IAAF) confirmed yesterday.

The others are Jamaican sprinter Aston Morgan, who is applying for US citizenship, Lithuanian Dalia Matkeviciene and Freddy Fernandez Caiza of Ecuador. All except Morgan were caught in out-of-competition testing and all face possible four-year bans.

National winner Burke dies at 41
LONDON (Reuters) - Jockey John Burke, the last man to ride the Cheltenham Gold Cup and Grand National winners in the same year, has died from a heart attack. He was 41.

Burke won the 1976 Gold Cup on Royal Frolic and the following month partnered Rag Trade to success at Aintree.

Mansell nightmare plot for Williams
LONDON (Reuters) - Frank Williams, boss of the Williams Grand Prix team, said yesterday his greatest nightmare was to see Nigel Mansell winning races and the world championship going to rivals McLaren.

The Williams team owner told a group of British journalists he feared his decision to overlook Mansell and appoint instead another Briton, David Coulthard, as his No. 2 driver could return to haunt him.

Coulthard, 23, won Williams's verdict to be Briton Damon Hill's team mate ahead of 41-year-old Mansell last month.

Williams said: "One of my nightmares is seeing Nigel destroying everyone all year. Then we would all look like a bunch of idiots."

"There's no reason why he and McLaren shouldn't win the first race. It is going to be very competitive and we are all starting from zero again."

Jones to win 50th Welsh cap
CARDIFF (Reuters) - Swansea scrum half Robert Jones will become only the third Welshman to top 50 caps for his country when he plays against England at Cardiff Arms Park on February 18.

Jones will join JPR Williams and Gareth Edwards in the exclusive "50 club" as Wales attempt to stop England taking a third step towards a Five Nations grand slam.

The Welsh team announced on Thursday showed five changes to the one beaten 21-9 by France last month.

Back from injury are wing Iwan Evans, who reclaims the captaincy, centre Nigel Davies, flanker Hemi Taylor and number eight Emyr Lewis.

Cardiff prop Mike Griffiths, who came on as a replacement for broken leg victim Ricky Evans in Paris, keeps his place in the front row.

Dropped are Simon Hill, Mark Taylor, Stuart Davies and Phil Davies.

Fake rugby World Cup souvenirs
JOHANNESBURG (Reuters) - South African police warned yesterday that large quantities of fake rugby union World Cup souvenirs had arrived in the country three months ahead of the 16-nation tournament.

Lieutenant Jan Combrink said they included beer mugs, T-shirts and flags with fake trade marks.

He warned members of the public to be on the lookout for fake goods and said dealers risked having their stock confiscated and a heavy fine imposed.

Thanks for everything, but perhaps its time we say goodbye, George

MAYBE, just maybe, George Graham is right and our miserable plight and endless torment, otherwise known as the 1994-1995 season, is nothing but a test, a divine challenge, a philosophical call to arms.

A test of will, character, dedication, loyalty and love.

But, George, you know as well as I do that a man's football team is probably the most monogamous relationship he will ever have. These bonds are religious.

Can a man conceivably wake up one day and from the depths of despair and a quest for a simpler, emotionally gentler life and consciously decide that he no longer supports Arsenal? Or in sound mind shift allegiance to, say, Chelsea?

You know that's impossible. So why must you get in trouble for - of all the players in the world - John Jensen? Why did you sell Anders Limpar for god's sake? Are you waiting for the year 2000 to announce that Kevin Campbell is not exactly the quintessential striker you, and we, hoped he would be?

Emotionally, financially, and mentally we have endured tests before. In case you forgot, George, before you came we had won only one FA cup, since you left the historic 1970-71 double title team.

Need I remind you that in the mid 1970's we proudly occupied the 17th place, saved from a real relegation scare only after an illustrious 6-1 thrashing of West Ham?

Being a supporter means total commitment, rain or shine. You have been a player and a manager, George. We have been supporters. So maybe you just don't understand what you are putting us through.

There are no mitigating circumstances here, no allowances. It's perseverance, endurance, courage. Self-deprecation is as far as it goes - and only amongst us loyal supporters.

It's all about a passion so strong that self-proclaimed "normal people" seem irrational to us. And anyway, they associate one with the team, especially when they lose, so one rarely has the patience to explain.

Any time we manage an effort to cool off the affair with the team - by living far away in Washington for instance -

Arsenal supporters the world over are not having an easy time at the moment, Alon Pinkas laments their plight

we invariably break down on the whimper of a new signing that sparks optimism. Or when the lads actually win twice in succession.

It's then we run to buy the Guardian, re-acquaint ourselves with the BBC World Service. And once again we swallow the abuse of the unfortunate envious who call us lucky, boring and other derogatory (for us complimentary) names.

For years, week in and week out, our mental health and mood are defined by Arsenal's results. It means constant anxiety and gallons of cold sweat slowly running down the back and onto the palms. Not talking to the wife for two hours on Saturday afternoon. On Arsenal's current performance, maybe not till Tuesday.

This is the wife that vows never to go to London with her husband again, just because he manages to drag her to Highbury by describing the place as a shrine, telling her it's the most important thing in his life, that she must share it at least once, that she will love the magnificent art-deco on the east upper-tier.

All true, she admits. And it's even OK that you hardly said a word to me since we got off at the Arsenal tube station. I even enjoyed the game.

But why must you embarrass me in front of 38,500 people by screaming at a certain man from Denmark you don't even know and at another called Kevin? Must you threaten to sexually molest their wives? Why haven't you ever smiled at me the way you did when Ian Wright took the field?

And you want to tell me you to do this every year? Even when they lead 3-0 you have breathing problems. Grow up, or get professional help, she says. What's wrong with supporting QPR? she asks. No aspirations, nice jerseys.

See what I mean about monogamy, George?

In the past, pain bore fruit. Any real Arsenal supporter knows exactly where he was, and in precisely what clinical state of mind, in the 90th minute of the Liverpool-Arsenal 1989, the last game of that season. Most of us out-sweat Michael Thomas on his way to glory.

I was living in Washington, shaking and shivering, listening to the BBC. It was the closest I had ever been to cardiac arrest. Unless I count the first seizure in the 88th minute of the 1979 FA Cup final, when Manchester United equalized, until two minutes later, when that magical Liam Brady foray ended with Alan Sunderland's glide, resuscitating me.

Theologically, I was in Liverpool in 1989. In the same way I was at Wembley on a sunny May afternoon in 1993 when, in the last second of extra time play, Andy Linighan caused havoc in the middle of Beijing. That's where, merely physically, I was standing and screaming into a cellular phone at a friend in London on the other end who described play by play the glorious corner kick.

Yes, George, those were the best of times. You gave the North Bank regulars, wherever they may be registered as residents, more than a fair share of pride and honors. And for that, we are eternally indebted.

So maybe we have become greedy? Since George arrived we had won the League championship twice, the League Cup twice, the FA Cup and the European Cup Winners Cup. No other team achieved half that. Certainly not that other team from North London whose miserable claim to fame is a championship win that historically coincided with John F. Kennedy's election as president.

But maybe, just maybe, George, you have run out of ideas. Your life span as a manager may be exhausted. Maybe, George. It just may be time to say our goodbyes.

What I mean is - it's you that has to go.

We supporters, we have no alternative but to stay.

A FEW hours after the birth of his first child, a daughter, on Wednesday, Idan Ovadia, 33, left Kfar Sava's Meir Hospital to get the clothes he had packed for his wife, Ayelet, 23, from their car. As he was crossing the street, a car sped through the red light, hit him, dragged him 30 meters, and sped off. Ovadia died of his injuries.

Yesterday, Petah Tikva Magistrate's Court Judge Yehuda Farago remanded Ala Mansur, 18, of Tira, the alleged hit-and-run driver, and Abdel Khader Issa, 18, of Taiba, a passenger, for 10 days. Another passenger, Ala Ra'ed, also of Taiba, was remanded for six days.

According to police, Mansur had stolen the car from the parking lot of Kfar Sava Magistrate's Court, picked up his two friends, and started driving wildly toward Tira. He does not have a driver's license.

Police said they intend to seek an indictment while the three are in remand, and to recommend they be held until trial. (Him)

POLICE are searching for a minor believed to have raped an 11-year-old girl from the Sharon region seven months ago. The girl was unaware she was pregnant until her condition raised a teacher's suspicions.

Another boy who allegedly introduced the rapist to the girl was remanded in juvenile court yesterday.

Sources close to the case said a teacher noticed the girl appeared to be pregnant and sent her for blood tests, which confirmed she was in a late stage of pregnancy.

The girl told investigators that a youth had forced her to have sex. The late stage of the pregnancy makes it impossible to carry out an abortion, the sources said.

Senior 'Ma'ariv' man held in bugging probe

RAINE MARCUS

MA'ARIV and Hachsharat Hayishuv security head David Ronen, 67, suspected of illegal wiretapping and disrupting a police investigation, was remanded for four days by Petah Tikva Magistrate's Court yesterday.

Newspaper publishers and employees, private investigators, and a defense lawyer have repeatedly been summoned for questioning, but Ronen's arrest emphasizes police determination to find out who commissioned the wide-scale wiretapping and bring him to trial, police sources said yesterday.

Ronen's boss, Ofer Nimrodi, was interrogated, under caution, for the third day running yesterday.

Police sources said Ronen's remand is just the "tip of the iceberg."

"Now the investigation is really starting," said one senior officer. "We simply don't want to show all our cards at the moment, to prevent those being investigated from knowing exactly what evidence we have against them."

Police are concentrating on two aspects of the wiretapping affair, which involves the bugging of phones, mobile phones, and faxes of politicians, businessmen, and media personnel. Private investigators Rafi Friedman and Ya'acov Tsur are awaiting trial in the case.

New developments have led detectives to investigate allegations that the phones of Ma'ariv employees, including journalists, were tapped.

Ronen, a former senior GSS officer, was arrested Tuesday at Ben-Gurion Airport upon his return from London. He was last questioned, under caution, about six months ago.

Police requested a six-day remand to enable police to continue the complex investigation without disturbance.

But Ronen's lawyer, Shmuel Stein, argued that allegations do not warrant his client's detention.

Ronen was ostensibly arrested for his alleged involvement in commissioning private investigators Yisrael Shabam and Mordechai Podim to bug the phone of Ya'acov Kedmi, former Ma'ariv marketing director.

Friedman and Tsur were charged several months ago with tapping Kedmi's phone.

Shabam and Podim were interrogated over the past few days, and their versions of events were compared with those of Ronen and Nimrodi. Police staged confrontations between them and Ronen and Nimrodi.

Supt. Tzahi Hefetz told the court that Ronen was also being questioned about allegedly paying a Bezek employee, Baruch Rubinstein, to point out which lines in a junction box to tap. Rubinstein was arrested along with Shabam and Podim last November, after the latter two allegedly tapped the phone of Ma'ariv journalist Amnon Abrahamovitch.

Hefetz argued that Ronen tried to disrupt the police investigation by warning Kedmi that his phone was tapped was rebutted by Stein, who said that since tapping a phone is only a misdemeanor, there is no legal obligation to report it to police.

Hefetz refused to answer most of Stein's requests to elaborate, instead giving confidential information to Judge Nira Daskin.

Ronen said his arrest does not worry him unduly.

"In this case, the police also want to make headlines," he said.

Pleasant weekend forecast; work planned to avoid future flooding of Fureidis

DAVID RUDGE

EXTENSIVE work is planned along parts of Nahal Dalia to prevent future flooding of Fureidis, after part of the village was swamped and scores of residents had to be evacuated Wednesday.

Interior Ministry Director-General Amram Kalaji, Water Commissioner Gideon Tsur, and Public Works Department director-general Ben-Zion Salman have agreed on a series of measures which they hope will resolve the problem.

These include removing all obstacles along the river bed, from where it flows past the village and under the old Haifa-to-Hadera road to the coastal highway and into the sea. This work is to be carried out by the Water Commission.

The PWD will be responsible for building bridges where the river runs under the two roads, and the Interior Ministry will tackle the problem of drainage in the village itself.

It was further agreed that the Ports and Railways Authority would be responsible for preventing obstructions at the point where the river flows under the main Haifa-to-Tel Aviv track before reaching the sea.

The total cost of the proposals, however, could run high as $10 million and it was not clear yesterday where the funding would come from.

Nevertheless, the plans were welcomed by residents of Fureidis. Local Council Chairman Abed Muasi said that this time - the village had previously been flooded in December 1991 - the matter could not be ignored.

"I'm sure that this time the authorities, the ministers and the directors-general are serious and will deal with the matter accordingly," said Muasi.

The full extent of the damage was revealed yesterday after the floodwaters subsided. Piles of debris, sodden furniture and household appliances, including a refrigerator, lay strewn in the fields.

The local council distributed hundreds of beds, mattresses, and blankets from emergency stores to residents, many of whom had to sleep at the homes of friends or relatives on Wednesday night.

"The damage to property, including furniture, and household appliances, like televisions and electrical equipment, is extensive and all together is likely to run into hundreds of thousands of shekels," said Muasi, who spend most of yesterday visiting the scores of affected homes.

The storms, which died out yesterday, dumped several meters of snow on Mt. Hermon and raised the level of water in the Kinneret so rapidly that the Deganya sluice gates had to be opened to prevent the lake from overflowing.

Mekorot officials said the sluice gates would remain open in accordance with the flow into the lake from the Jordan River and its tributaries.

The Hermon ski site was opened yesterday, despite intermittent light snowfall. Site manager Eli Sagron said he hopes the accumulation of snow, reaching a depth of two meters on the lower slopes and as much as four meters on the peak, would be sufficient to last for several weeks. Thousands of people are expected to visit the site over the weekend.

The forecast is for dry and warmer conditions from today through at least Sunday.

Dinitz: Agency didn't repay
many expenses

FORMER Jewish Agency chairman Shmuel Dinitz yesterday denied conferring with former agency finance department chief Zvi Barak regarding certain trips Dinitz took abroad.

The question arose concerning a document listing expenses incurred by Dinitz and his wife during a 1990 visit to Czechoslovakia to check possible sites for setting up transit camps for immigrants from the former Soviet Union.

Dinitz's lawyer quoted from Barak's testimony from some time ago in which he said Dinitz conferred with him before leaving on the trip, but Dinitz said only the agency leadership had the right to approve his trip.

Asked what interest Barak would have in lying about the matter, Dinitz said Barak wanted to "please the prosecution."

Jerusalem District Court Judge Shalom Brenner asked Dinitz why he returned the money for the trip if he was not required to do so. Because, he said, the press had been full of criticism of agency officials' wasting money.

The defense also noted that the Dinitzes had paid out of their own pockets when they hosted notables on agency matters, without asking for their money back. In one instance, they hosted 28 people in a gathering to honor the US ambassador to Switzerland, with Dinitz paying NIS 2,031 and getting back only NIS 251. (Him)
